Gold Mining Revives

The revival of local interest in mining is all to the good. The more interest shown, the more work will be done. And the more work the more mineral wealth this section of Oregon will produce.

Gold is the only commodity in the world, that the depression hasn't deflated. Gold in fact today, is worth more,—that is will buy more,—than ever before in the history of this generation.

That there is gold in these yere hills, everyone knows. Millions have been taken out in the past. While the rich surface yields have probably been exhausted, there is no reason to doubt that modern mining methods will make millions more available.

In this gold revival two things should be avoided. Wildcat schemes and exaggerated reports on one hand. Public indifference to conservative investment and development on the other. Public indifference has been pretty well eliminated. Now with the formation of a mining committee under the leadership of experienced mining men who are interested in constructive development rather than get-rich-quick promotion, our local industry as well as other mineral development work, should be put upon a permanent, business-like basis.

Such a movement we repeat is all to the good. The mineral resources of Southern Oregon represent a genuine natural asset, which should be developed, and steadily add to the wealth of this community, from year to year.

AH! AH! NAUGHTY—MUSN'T TOUCH!

An injury brushed some skin off from the front of the leg below the knee. As a first aid disinfectant mercurochrome was applied. The patient dressed the wound herself every day. While showing it to her friend she dropped a bit of cotton on the floor, picked it up, and placed it over the raw surface and applied the bandage. Her friend remarked that this was unsafe. The patient thought not, as the mercurochrome is so powerful that it destroys any germs there might be on the cotton. Is that so? In this case it would seem at least questionable, for a few days later the patient was seriously ill with infection of the leg.

Mercurochrome is all right as a first aid disinfectant. Probably it is as efficient as tincture of iodine for the purpose. It has one advantage over iodine as a first aid remedy for use in the home, namely, that it doesn't bite or smart so much on a large wound or raw surface. The bite or smart of iodine is only momentary, however. Any one who has used plain tincture of iodine or iodine and glycerin half and half as an application to a canker sore in the mouth (for which it is an excellent remedy) knows it bites for a moment and then seems to leave the canker less sensitive. On the other hand, mercurochrome has one or two disadvantages which in my opinion, render it less satisfactory than iodine. It makes a conspicuous red stain on everything, and it costs too much.

The breach of surgical technique committed by the woman who picked the bit of cotton off the floor and placed it in contact with the raw surface was a glaring one, but most laymen commit just as grave errors when dealing with minor wounds, even though they are meticulous about using antiseptics.

The layman has a childlike faith in antiseptic or germicidal agents which is not shared by the physician, surgeon or even the well-trained nurse.

Perhaps the most fatal error of the layman who attempts to treat his own or another's wound is the touching of the raw surface with finger or with any object that is not sterile.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.
 Facial Blemishes.
 Will castor oil applied every night remove moles?—Miss M. M.
 Would like to ask if you know of any method of removing birthmarks.
 —K.
 I sent for — company's solvent and when I put it on a dark brown spot on my cheek it burned terribly and now the spot is worse. — Mrs. O. D.
 Answer — It is unwise to attempt self-treatment or to permit any one other than a responsible physician to attempt to remove such facial blemishes. The risk of scar formation or of serious infection from tinkering is too great.
 "Doctor," Eh?
 After 40 years of the physick habit I am back to normalcy, thanks to your guidance. A young doctor heard me say I take a spoonful or two of flaxseed now and then. He advised me to stop it, as he has seen severe — — M. J. W.
 Answer—On the other hand, many obstinate cases of the same uneliminable malady have responded well to flaxseed treatment.

It will then be legal to bet upon horse races, which everybody always did any time they felt like it. If there is any justification for a revolution, it is four or five broken-down, middle-aged Hambletonian stallions prancing around a mile track in slightly less than four minutes.

Mining is the order of the day, and many are in the hills wooling Lady Luck, with pick and shovel and pan. There was a time when mining here was confined to chasing rainbows in a Nash lobby rocking chair.

Sunday was too gloomy for the social buds and blossoms to stray into the open spaces and get poison ivy, for which there are more cures than cures for colds.

The mail today brought a letter from Reppress, Calif. "Folsom prison is located at Reppress, and the writer of the letter happens to be confined there. He will get out next August, after seven years of reppress at Reppress. He is a former local boy, who did not do so well in the city. "When I was 17 years old," reads the letter, "I knew everything, but now I have learned I was mistaken. I will never take another thing—not even a chance." The writer also seems to think that the poet's claim, "that stone walls and iron bars do not make a prison," is a truthful statement. The advice in the letter, if any, is printed for the benefit of 17 year old boys, who being 17 years old will not take it.

Valley democrats continue mad at the valley Republicans, because the latter will not give up the reins of power to the Roosevelt administration. The average Democrat is happiest when angry at a Republican.

Another hog calling contest is in order, to bring out the real lung power of the rural areas. The Saturday efforts were not so promising, and of high excellence, but it is known that the expert hog callers either remained at home or kept still. It would be a treat to hear Asbury Beall and his boy, Col. Tou Velle, Herry Offenshoper of the Applegate, C. Wig Ashpole, Mike Hanley, Charles Taylor, Dewey Hill, and others in open competition. It would not be necessary for them to come to town. The judges would assemble in the stand, and the competitors go into their backyards and start yelling. Then the judges would proclaim the winner, making due allowance for volume, distance, and interference from the wind. For instance, Michael Hanley on Lake Crk. and 20 miles away, could not deafen the judges as completely as Asbury Beall, on his lane, a stone's throw, or five miles away. Mr. Dewey Hill at Prospect, would be placed at par, with his rivals though 48 miles away, northeasterly. His hog call would have the advantage of coming down hill all the way. The above are the cream of the hog callers. This does not mean that any hog caller is skin-milk.

The Power of Public Opinion

THE sensational progress made by President Roosevelt in less than four weeks, shows clearly the determining force in this democracy of public opinion.

That there is strong opposition in the congress to the "new deal" is certain. This was even shown when the president fired his first bombshell via his economy program.

Stronger opposition developed against the administration's railroad plan, and the strongest to date against his farm relief program.

Nevertheless Roosevelt remains in the pilot house, with one hand on the whistle cord and the other on the "full steam ahead" lever.

WHY? Simply because he has public opinion behind him. The experience that befell our own Senator Steiwer is typical.

Senator Steiwer was one of the few to speak against the administration's economy program. From the standpoint of partisan politics, and normal resentment in a democracy to executive dictatorship, he stood on solid ground.

But 24 hours after his anti-Roosevelt speech, Oregon's junior senator decided that Long Beach earthquake had extended to Oregon. It is rumored that there were enough protest telegrams, fired from Portland alone, to justify extra dividends by the Western Union and Postal.

Other recalcitrants had a similar experience. President Roosevelt has the people of this country behind him. He knows it. That is why he is making hay while the sun shines. NOW members of the congress know it.

JUST as long as this situation lasts—and it promises to last for some time—our new president will continue to break all records for rapid, decisive executive accomplishment. Members of the opposition in both senate and house instead of trying to trip him up, will run over each other, in an effort to grab his coat tails.

It is called dictatorship, but it isn't really. It is merely a demonstration of what an intelligent and aggressive leader of a democracy can do, when he has the people of his country behind him.

Scott McBride of the Anti-Saloon league, and Dr. Clarence True Wilson of the Methodist board of temperance, prohibition and public morals.

Mrs. Boole at once sent a telegraphed reply in which she said the suggestion of "cooperation of the W. C. T. U. and your organization" was "absurd."

PORTLAND BLAZE LICKS UP LUMBER, MILL EQUIPMENT

PORTLAND, Mar. 28.—(AP)—Fire sweeping through the yards and crane shed of the Jones Lumber company was brought under control early today after causing damage estimated by firemen at about $175,000.

Starting at the south end of the yards on the waterfront, the flames spread swiftly northward, and for a time endangered the main plant. Three fire boats and several engine companies answered the alarm. Origin of the fire was undetermined, and no one was injured.

Firemen and police today were investigating the possibility the blaze was of incendiary origin. Starting in the crane shed, the fire spread to the entire south end of the plant in less than three minutes.

Almost one million feet of finished lumber, worth $15 a thousand feet, was destroyed, as were three cranes worth $15,000, and other equipment worth about $5,000.

THE FATAL PANCAKE
 (Dental Journal)

There is no anesthetic more potent than the pancake. After eating a stack of pancakes, a person is indifferent to almost anything.

The pancake is not taken in the arm, hypodermically, nor is it inhaled like ether, but it is a drug with a shape and kick all its own. It is in disc form about the size and thickness of a graphophone record. The patient or pancake-eater may administer the dose himself—albeit he should be watched and dragged off before he completely suffocates himself. The process is more pleasant if the pancake is laced in maple or imitation maple molasses. As the patient eats the pancakes he develops a frenzy and will eat himself to death unless a whistle is blown or the supply is arbitrarily shut off. In ten minutes the patient will begin to yawn, in a half hour he will be completely bored with life, and in forty minutes he will fall into a stupor and you may sell him life insurance, take his pocketbook, or get his name on the dotted line for a building lot in a swamp. A man under the influence of pancakes will resist nothing. He has no interest in life except his sweet dreams.

Don't Be a Rip Van Winkle

IF SOME Oregon Rip Van Winkle had gone to sleep ten years ago, and awakened today, what a shock he would get.

He would find in this former paradise of aridity, beer gardens about to bloom.

He would find horse and dog racing legalized, and betting on them sanctioned.

He would find a former Republican state rabidly democratic, and a Roosevelt in the White House, who had never voted the Republican ticket.

He would find a gold panning school on the S. P. right of way, a hog calling contest as a Saturday drawing card, and a commissary working overtime less than a stone's throw from the post office.

He would find a score of revolutionists in jail, held on charges ranging from horsewhipping, through robbery to first degree murder.

He would find a valley at the end of March with snow still on the foothills and not a pear tree in bloom.

Query: Would he ask for a hot bath and a change of underwear, or ask to go back to sleep?

Being a Rip Van Winkle, he would probably be too dumb to sense the worm had turned, and after his long sleep, he had awakened to a new dawn.

True to his slumbering nature, he would undoubtedly go back to bed.
