Good-bye Mr. Percolator

Good Coffee at Last and Good Every Time

BY ELLA LEHR

Food news is good news! And when a new product of a different way of treating an old standby comes along, I want to get it into headlines!

Coffee for instance! I guess we thought all that could be done for coffee had been done; that it was just naturally a temperamental creature with good, bad and indifferent moods—and that it would continue so.

If it were good we thanked our luck. If bad we usually blamed the coffee, sometimes the water. Or decided to boil up the pot with a pinch of soda or perhaps to change brands! It was accepted—like a "cow-lick" or a nose we didn't like—and with about as much chance to alter.

Drip! Drip! Drip!
 But here's news that's taken the country by storm. A method that produces a good cup of coffee—easily and all the time. Absolutely foolproof—and your mother-in-law will rejoice in it as much as you do. For after all it's Friend Husband stalking off to work—grumbling over the coffee that puts little Cupid on crutches.

The drip method—that's all! True—it's been known to coffee testers and connoisseurs for a long time that the drip or filtration method produced the clearest, most soul-stirring of brews—sparkling, fragrant, full bodied.

But it just didn't get around, for mother had the percolator habit, and habits are hard to change, and grandma had grown accustomed to the old coffee pot with its accumulation of flavors—sorta like your husband's old pipe.

The Little Filter Paper
 Simple enough—this method—boiling water poured quickly and but once over ground coffee. On its way it must pass through a clean fresh filter paper, producing the clear amber liquid so characteristic of true drip coffee.

Of course—as with all methods—you must carefully choose the pot. For there are drip coffee makers galore and with a great variety of differences—in the material of both coffee pot and strainer, in the size of the coffee basket and in the number of holes in the basket.

The Right Coffee
 As to the coffee itself—merely grinding finer the coffee meant for a percolator or some method other than drip is not enough. It must be specially blended and specially roasted, so that the boiling water which passes through the coffee rapidly and only once will immediately extract the rich fragrant coffee oils and none of the bitter woody taste of the fibre.

A perfect brew—what length coffee manufacturers do go to assure it! Coffee specially prepared, a drip coffee maker perfect in design to accompany it, and filter papers right in the can—that's what one of them actually offers... you've no excuse now for not providing a Good Cupa Coffee!

What's the Value of a TRADE-MARK?

TODAY the Chesterfield trade-mark is very valuable. Back of it is the good will of thousands—perhaps hundreds of thousands—of smokers.

Chesterfield cigarettes were first manufactured more than twenty-five years ago. At the start, they were sold at a loss, but the quantity sold increased steadily from year to year, until now Chesterfields are sold in great volume at a very small percentage of profit.

The Chesterfield trade-mark, as indicated above, is registered in the United States Patent Office. This means that the United States Government says that only Chesterfield may use this trade-mark for cigarettes.

This is not only for our protection, but for yours as well, because what the Chesterfield trade-mark really means is that you and all Chesterfield smokers will get Chesterfields manufactured under the same formula, by the same people, and in all respects absolutely the same, in every package you buy, year in and year out.

Wherever you buy them, in this or in any other country, you can depend upon the Chesterfield trade-mark.
