

GIGANTIC RADIO BUILT SECRETLY FOR UNCLE SAM

pose of state which would require a 500,000 watt radio station.

The inside story of what happened to Nellie Taylor Ross is the best possible expose of how this federal patronage thing works.

The former Wyoming governor's did yeoman service in the campaign. She had to be cared for among the first. General Parley spotted a job for her as treasurer of the United States. It has a big title and pays good money. He thought there was not much work attached to it.

Everything was settled until Treasury Secretary Woodring heard about it. He balked—contending it was a job for a man.

The big boys got their heads together and decided perhaps head of the civil service commission would be better. When certain Democratic politicians heard that they wept copiously. Imagine a politician being required to play ball with a woman to protect his federal patronage. It is bad enough even to have a civil service commission without a woman running it and messing up plans. That killed that idea.

Then the mint job was chosen because nobody could ever accuse the director of the mint of having any influence over anything. But there were difficulties. The job had already been promised to Mary M. O'Reilly, assistant director. She has been running it for years anyway while political playboys held the title of director. You can never prove it, but it is nevertheless true that her nomination had already been okayed at the White House and was ready to go to the senate.

The fat fellows decided it was too bad for Miss O'Reilly, but Miss Ross had to be pushed up front. They switched the setup and the name of Miss Ross went to the senate instead of Miss O'Reilly. The latter will remain as assistant director, still doing the work.

That makes the mint an all-woman show. There are no other officials. The two can go through Uncle Sam's pockets every night.

The gent who passes on all administration financial policies (Prof. Moley in case you do not know) is toying with a plan to include insurance companies in the federal reserve system.

It came from an Ohio insurance man who thinks something must be done. A separate reserve classification would be created for that purpose. The companies could then discount their paper through the reserve system.

The big companies in New York have heard what is going on and are trying to stop it.

JACK THOMPSON NEW PRESIDENT OF SHRINE CLUB

Jack Thompson was selected by members of the Medford Shrine club as president of that organization for 1933, at the regular monthly meeting held today at the Hotel Medford. Mr. Thompson will succeed Harold Brown who has made an enviable record as head of the Shrine club during the past year.

Roy Elliott will fill the office of vice-president of the club and Elbert Lenox will act as secretary for 1933 as a result of today's election. With these three well known Shriners at the helm of the Medford Shrine club for the coming season, members of that organization anticipate a year of outstanding activity.

Horace Bromley, veteran Copco camera man and advertising manager of the California Oregon Power company, presented a program of interesting moving pictures showing Shrine ceremonies of past years as well as glimpses of more recent "shots" showing southern Oregon mining activity and official Crater Lake National Park openings. Mr. Bromley's pictures scored a decided hit with the Shriners from various sections of southern Oregon who attended today's luncheon.

A group of the Shrine club members enjoyed additional moving pictures recently taken by A. P. Johnson which were shown by Bromley following the regular program.
