

LOWD TESTIMONY ANNOYS BANKS IN MURDER HEARING

By ARTHUR PERRY.

EUGENE, March 9.—L. A. Banks, on trial for murder here, according to the testimony of Phil B. Lowd, deputy sheriff, and former political protégé of the former agitating editor, Lowd's testimony was also reported as highly disturbing to Mrs. Banks. The deputy testified to menacing boasts and words of Banks and his wife, immediately following the killing. Lowd testified he had often called at the Banks home on business, and on one occasion had been a dinner guest. Both defendants watched him closely as he testified, and, at times, Lowd showed a reluctance to testify against his former political benefactor.

Banks and his wife came to court Tuesday morning, in a slightly less cheerful mood, than for the past four days. Both manifested a keen interest in the arguments of Assistant Attorney General Moody, and listened intently with rapt attention to the plea of their own attorney. At times Banks closed his eyes as if weary from a sleepless night.

When the court indicated that the revolver found in the Banks home, would be admitted as evidence, Banks rocked in his chair and plainly showed annoyance. Both were grave and serious following the decision. Mrs. Banks leaned over once and smiled comfortingly to her mate. Banks smiled wanly at bits of testimony, with a humorous tinge. In the afternoon, both seemed tired and depressed.

Mrs. Ariel Burton Pomeroy and son, whose presence have not been noted in the courtroom, have returned here, it is reported. Mrs. Pomeroy is an intimate friend of the Banks and a staunch supporter of his political philosophy. As a defense witness, she is barred from the courtroom.

Leonard N. Hall, editor of the Jacksonville Miner, and the target of a long-continued effort by Mrs. Henrietta B. Martin, president of the so-called "Good Government Congress" arrived Tuesday morning with a pocket full of the last issue of his paper. He was accompanied by a son-in-law of E. A. Fleming, held in jail as a material witness.

Paul Luy, former reporter on Banks' newspaper, was also among those present. Hall and Luy occupied seats just behind Banks and his wife. The defendants paid no attention to them.

At the morning recess, Banks and his brother-in-law, Charles Moran, engaged in a conference with Attorneys Phipps and Enright. The conference was continued in the ante-room where Banks each day smokes a cigarette. He spoke graciously to newspaper workers, including a woman scribe, formerly employed by him, in the early days of his journalistic efforts in the valley.

GUARD IN BANKS HOME GRILLED BY DEFENSE LAWYER

By ARTHUR PERRY.

EUGENE, May 9.—Charles Clause, one of the coroner's guards, at the home of L. A. Banks, following the slaying of Constable George J. Prescott, came to the witness stand Tuesday morning as a corroborating witness, to those who testified relative to the search for, and finding of, evidence in the house. Clause said he was on guard at Banks' home for a few hours with Louis Jennings, then on Medford police duty.

Attorney Lonergan, for the defense, in cross-examination of Clause, asked: "And you bore animus towards Mr. Banks?"

"Yes—to a certain extent," replied the former Ashland police chief. Immediately the fiery Irish defense chief, leaped upon the phrase and asked a series of questions, seeking to weaken him before the jury, and to show animosity. Clause later clarified his words to "not in any great particular."

In response to one query Clause replied, "the ripped everybody up the back in his newspaper." Lonergan drew from him the admission that he, himself, had never been specifically mentioned.

"You didn't like Banks?" "Not particularly," replied Clause. Attorney Lonergan dwelt lengthily on this point, in an effort to show animus, but the witness denied he came to Medford and volunteered his services, other than from a sense of civic duty, "and because of my experience as a policeman." Clause said he had been deputized "and never asked any pay for it."

Clause spent a rather hectic half hour on the stand before noon under the harassing queries of Lonergan, and the grueling continued at the start of the afternoon, but Clause held to his main contentions unshaken.

Walter S. Walker, state policeman, stationed at Klamath Falls, testified to seeing Game Warden Roach find the empty cartridge shell in the ashes of the Banks fireplace. The state contends this was the death shell, and thrown in the fireplace after the killing. Walker corroborated the testimony of Roach.

"Captain Bown detailed Roach and myself to the Banks home, to find the empty shell, and we found it," Walker responded to a defense query. Walker said the coroner's guard reported them about five o'clock.

Keith Ambrose, state policeman, formerly a Klamath county law officer on the stand, nettled Attorney Lonergan with his brisk and detailed answers.

"Don't argue with me—answer the question," Lonergan barked. Ambrose told of a trip to the Banks home on official business, the afternoon of the murder.

PRESENTATION OF STATE'S EVIDENCE ENDING THURSDAY

Attorney general to direct the prosecution met the same late. The state explained it introduced the transcripts as a precautionary move only. Gordon F. Kershaw, Medford, was received Mrs. Banks "Proceed in order" note from the hands of Tommy Williams and delivered it to Sergeant James O'Brien, was a brief but emphatic witness at the Tuesday afternoon session. He testified on direct examination that he had stood on a lawn at Main and Quince streets, a block from the Banks residence, and watched Williams hand Mrs. Banks' note to Lieutenant Alex Dunn of the state police. When Lieutenant Dunn handed it back to Williams, Kershaw said he went across the street and asked Williams for it, and Williams had turned it over to him, with the words: "Take it; I don't want it."

The note was given to Williams by Mrs. Banks, the testimony showed, after Williams, out of curiosity, had stopped his oil truck in front of the Banks home, and Mrs. Banks had signaled him three times to "Please come and take this to the state police."

The note directed: "Come and get George Prescott, and you will be all right. Then proceed in order.—Mrs. Banks."

Efforts of Attorney Lonergan, under cross examination, to have Kershaw change his story failed. The youth steadfastly clung to every essential statement he made. At one point Attorney Lonergan asked: "Mr. Kershaw, you are not trying to argue with me, are you?" Kershaw assured the attorney he was not, and maintained he had sought the note because "it might be important evidence" and wanted the police to see it.

Coroner Frank Perl, who on his first appearance on the stand was under fire of the defense ace, was recalled today, armed with documentary evidence. He testified to the appointment of a coroner's guard for five days over the Banks home, and presented the formal order therefor. Coroner Perl also presented a signed receipt from Mrs. Banks showing the house and contents had been turned back to her. The court denied the admission of these records on the grounds "it is not the duty of the court to pause and inquire in this manner, in which the coroner performs his duties."

Dr. C. I. Drummond, county physician, testified to the result of the autopsy over the body of Constable George J. Prescott. The court denied admission of the photo of the body as exhibits upon the grounds they "would infringe upon the constitutional rights of the defendant, and serve no good purpose."

Constable Francis (Pete) Martin of Ashland and Harry Ingle of Ashland, named by Coroner Perl as guards over the Banks home, testified to their appointment. Martin was subjected to a lengthy cross-examination.
