NEW GENERAL GAS LAUNCHED TODAY

One of the most spectacular merchandising campaigns in the history of the northwest was launched today by General Petroleum Corporation in connection with the initial public offering of its new motor fuel, General Four-Star gasoline.

The campaign makes use of many media of publicity. Newspaper space, radio, billboards, station signs, streamers, wind-shield stickers and novelties have all been conscripted by the company in this tremendous sales effort.

"Eight years ago, General Petroleum launched a similar campaign when it first entered the northwest field," Ralph Q. Bowman, assistant general sales manager, said yesterday. "Public reception and endorsement of its products at that time were phenomenal, and it is anticipated that the present campaign will be even more successful."

"Newspaper space will carry the major part of the sales burden, General Petroleum, like other major industrial units, having proved to its own satisfaction that there is no substitute for newspaper advertising. All other elements in the campaign will tie in with the newspaper effort."

"Back of the introduction of General Petroleum's new motor fuel, to be known as new General Four-Star gasoline, lies one of the romance stories of the petroleum industry. Years of research, study and engineering, and the addition of new refinery equipment, costing in excess of $1,000,000, were required to produce the gasoline, which petroleum chemists have pronounced the most highly efficient motor fuel refined to date."

"This gratifying result was finally brought about by the gradual development of two new processes in gasoline refining, processes which literally break up and rearrange the molecules of gasoline in such a way that they become stabilized," Mr. Bowman stated. "The technical explanation is fascinating, but too involved to be clear to the lay mind. Perhaps I can make it understandable by saying that in their original forms the gasoline molecules are 'on the loose,' they're not fixed and consequently they represent uncontrolled and wasted power. By changing their character and stabilizing them, this power is brought under control and made wholly available to the motorist."

It is because of this controlled power, Mr. Bowman added, that the new General Four-Star gasoline has a higher anti-knock rating, starts quicker, picks up much faster and makes a much greater mileage record.

ANGLER LANDS FISH AND ANOTHERS ROD AND REEL
