Wallace Piano Pupils Win Sincere Applause
To the crowd of local music lovers who filled the Baldwin Piano Shoppe recital last evening the playing of piano pupils of Miss Imogene Wallace came as a refreshing departure from the care of the day and the too often accepted idea of student recitals.

Each pupil, playing from memory, went into the interpretation of each composition with an ease and eagerness which placed the audience in the mood for relaxation and the true appreciation of the music. There was a marked freedom evident from the opening to the close of the recital, which was followed by a beautiful Chopin waltz, one of the more brilliant ones played by the audience at the request of the audience.

The program was brief with a continuous flow of music from the opening, shortly after 8 o'clock, to the close, shortly after 9. The pupils showed no inclination to hesitate to find themselves, but to respond to the inspiration of each number, which led into another.

They were greeted with enthusiastic cheers which filled the recital hall, remaining until the last note died away.

The program opened with a duet, "Perfumes of Summer Nights" (by Elias), played by Carol Carlin and Emily Fryce, and closed with Ibert's "The Little White Monkey," played with the finished touch of June Atkins, one of the advanced pupils.

Others participating in the program were Mary Louise McGinnis, Margaret Mary Mann, Noeene Walton, Frances McCoy, Barbara Dorris, Billie Piche and Barbara Shadel.
