

LA DIEU GUILTY IN BALLOT PLOT IS JURY VERDICT

city, in the sum of $7,500. Moody said, "there was some question about the citizenship of Englehardt and the other two were uncertain."

Objections were filed by Attorney T. J. Enright for the defense, to the state's contentions, and their request for immediate commitment.

The court ruled that La Dieu be allowed liberty for the night with the understanding that he be in court this morning, to satisfy the court on the strength of the bonds. "The court must be assured that the bonds are gilt-edged," Judge Skpworth said.

The controversial points in the jury's discussion were said to be over the connection of defendants other than La Dieu with the vote stealing and that the jurors analyzed thoroughly the evidence of the chief witnesses.

Sympathy Swayed
One of the jurors, declared that two of the jurors were "guided more by their sympathies than their convictions."

The state contended that County Judge Earl H. Fehl, suspended Sheriff Schermmerhorn, John Glenn, former County Jailor Tom L. Brecheen of Ashland and Walter J. Jones, mayor of Rogue River, conspired to steal the ballots, and prevent a recount of the votes for sheriff.

The verdict was a signal victory for the state, inasmuch as it gave credence to their conspiracy contentions. The case was bitterly fought.

The evidence against La Dieu, told by accomplices and corroborated by others, not parties to the crime, was that on the night of February 20, during a meeting of the "Good Government Congress," the theft was committed and the courthouse vault burglarized.

Ballots Destroyed
Four ballot containers were taken on the first trip, and six more were taken in Phil Lowd's auto, borrowed and driven by La Dieu. They took the ballots to the home of Jones in Rogue River, burning the ballots at the home of Wesley McKittrick's parents and throwing the empty sacks in Rogue river at the mouth of Galls creek.

Ringleaders Shown
Evidence was introduced to show that Fehl, Schermmerhorn, Jones, Glenn and Brecheen had suggested the crime to the actual perpetrators. The state held that Schermmerhorn and Fehl were the chief beneficiaries of the crime.

La Dieu did not take the stand in his own behalf and the court instructed the jury that this was his privilege and should not weigh against him in their deliberations.

La Dieu, who has been a resident of this city for about four years, was formerly a business aide of L. A. Bana, convicted slayer. He has a wife and three children.

C. A. HEIGHO JOINS VAL J. FISCHER IN SERVICE STATION

Val J. Fischer, who opened the Sixth Street Super Service Station in October, 1927, needs no introduction to the people of Medford and surrounding territory. The service which he has rendered to the public and the quality of merchandise supplied them have made his name well known with hundreds of southern Oregon motorists.
Under his management the Sixth Street Super Service Station has been modernized and remodeled from time to time to meet changing conditions and the business has grown to the point where it has become too much for one man to handle.
In order to provide the public with the service which they have become accustomed to receive at this station, Mr. C. A. Heigho has been made a member of the corporation and will assist Mr. Fischer in the management and operation. Mr. Heigho is a newcomer to Medford, having spent a number of years in the employ of the United States Rubber company, and he is well qualified by training and experience to take care of the tire needs of both the pleasure car owner and the truck operator.
The sale of tires has not in the past been stressed by the Sixth Street Super Service Station for the reason that it has been impossible to obtain a lineup which Mr. Fischer felt would fit in with the quality of other merchandise handled. However, a connection now has been made with the United States Rubber company to handle its line in this territory, and the same effort will be made to give the motoring public the same high degree of service which has always been given in the other departments of the business.
