

BUDGET DIRECTOR TAKES COMMITTEE SESSIONS AT EASE

By HERBERT PLUMMER

WASHINGTON — Appearances before congressional committees often are regarded pretty much as bad dreams by those in the administration. The going sometimes is rough.

President Roosevelt, however, has three men in his official family whom he can send to the hill at almost any time with confidence that they will be able to stand up against almost anything sent their way.

One is young Lewis Douglas, director of the budget. Then there is Cordell Hull, secretary of state. And Claude Swanson, secretary of the navy.

Douglas went before the ways and means committee of the house the other day to explain the administration's industrial recovery bill.

Douglas, who served three terms in the house from Arizona before the president picked him for the intricate job of cutting down on governmental expenses, visibly impressed those 25 gentlemen who have the reputation of being about as "hard-boiled" a group as there is on the hill.

He talked their language, because he has served alongside them in the house. He seemed to know what they were interested in, having brought out more clearly and anticipated their questions.

Thrust and Parry One was reminded of the days when Ogden Mills appeared before ways and means. Mills, too, is a former member of the house and could match wits and words with the best of them.

Mills' appearance before a congressional committee always was the signal for a good show. He would argue and wrangle with the committee members as if he were the inquisitor instead of the witness. He was the stormiest, yet most delightful, committee sessions ever held at the capitol centered around the youthful Mr. Mills.

It isn't always so easy. When Pat Hurley was secretary of war in the Hoover administration he became so infuriated at a committee session that he got up and stalked out of the room.

Minute Men Cordell Hull, Roosevelt's secretary of state, has long experience in the house back of him, as well as a turn in the senate. If there are any appearances to be made on reciprocal tariff agreements, the secretary is ready. He has served on both ways and means of the house and the finance committee of the senate.

Secretary Swanson should find the occasions he is called to testify hill to discuss naval affairs relatively simple. He was on that committee for years while a senator, and before that served a long time as a member of the house.

4-DAY CELEBRATION PLANNED IN EUGENE STARTING JULY 1ST

Details of the four-day celebration planned in Eugene for July 1-4 were brought to this city Wednesday by Bayard Welch and E. O. Harlan, Eugene, who conferred with Chamber of Commerce officials, veterans' organizations, hotel and camp owners. One of the principal features of state-wide interest is the California state picnic scheduled for Sunday, July 2, in Riverside park of Eugene. Hundreds of invitations have been mailed to California families who have written to realtors that they intend to make inspection trips to various parts of this state. These families are being urged to start in time to visit the communities en route to Eugene and arrive for the picnic. Local realtors are urged to contact these families and give them information on this section.

The Eugene veterans' societies have planned a monster celebration for July 4, which will close with a gigantic fireworks display in the evening. Veterans' organizations in all parts of the state have been invited to join in the celebration. The Eugene men state that the usual carnival attractions, games for the children and other features will be provided for the four days.

GAS IN WARFARE IS HELD HUMANE

MILWAUKEE, June 16. — (UP) — Gas is the most humane form of warfare in the opinion of Dr. Philip B. Mats, chief of the research subdivision of the veterans' research administration at Washington. "Personally I should prefer to be gassed rather than wounded," Dr. Mats told the United Press. "The idea of warfare is to remove as many of the enemy as possible, either by killing or disabling men. Now, gas is particularly efficient because it not only removes the soldier, but it necessitates the attention of others to care for him. This makes things more difficult for the enemy. "Generally speaking most of the gas victims were merely disabled and put out of the fight for a time."
