Applegate 'Does' Chicago Fair in Big Way as Mail Tribune Traveling Scribe

Editorial Rooms, Niagara Falls Gazette, Niagara Falls, N. Y. June 12th, 1933. To the Editor: Just after sending in the last report from Chicago, Don and I discovered that by going to the publicity bureau of the Century of Progress and showing our press cards...

When you get to the fair, see that one. It costs, ordinarily forty cents, and it is one of the three or four concessions that we thought was worth what they asked. About forty of Ripley's living curiosities are there, and thousands of inanimate odds and ends. The manager, when he heard about our trip, was very interested. He said he knew Jim Bishop of KMEM fame. I asked him his card but he called to give me his card but he called to give me his card but he called to give me his card...

After that thrilling ride, we waited a while at the top of the elevator to get our breath, and then went across the bridge to Goat Island, in the middle of the river at the very edge of the falls. Here was the trip through the Cave of the Winds. Expense being nothing in our young lives (excuse me again, but by the way, I had my twenty-first birthday the other day—the first in my life without a birthday cake.) As I started to say, expense being nothing in our young lives, we had to go on that trip too. At this place we had to change all our clothing, and put on rubber suits. The slicker jackets, yellow this time instead of black, were hooded, and the shoes were made of hemp to prevent slipping. Down in another elevator, and out on the face of the cliff between the two falls. A narrow wooden bridge led down onto the rocks that have worn loose and fallen in past ages. The tiny bridge is rebuilt every year, and the ice carries it away the next winter. The bridge leads over the rocks and through the spray right past the foot of Bridal Veil falls, and then into the storm. That high of the cat-walk is called the Hurricane Deck, and deserves the name. The wind whips and drives great torrents of cold water upon you, and you are soon soaked through. A sign looming through the spray warns you to "beware of pick-pockets." Then up a flight of water-worn stairs to the Cave of the Winds. Water thundering down on both sides, and being blown in all directions about you. It was a real thrill. Then back through more gusts of water to the elevator, and back to the dressing room. After dressing, you sign the register that has been kept since 1885. When you come out into the open air again you feel as though you had just been in a nice cool swimming pool.

When we got to Buffalo, we decided to see Niagara Falls. That was at three in the afternoon. By the time we'd cleaned up, it was four. It seemed more prudent to hitchhike the twenty-five miles to the falls, we had to find a place to leave our bed roll. While wandering about town in this pursuit, we passed a police station. We entered, told our story, and asked if we could leave it there. The head man hemmed and hawed, and then mumbled that it was "this way"—he would like to accommodate us, but that nothing was safe around there—it would probably be swiped, before we got back! It was around dark when we got to Niagara Falls, so we went out to Niagara Falls University, a small Catholic school, and they put us up for the night. We had a good swim, which helped a lot, and this morning, Monday, June 12th, we went down to see the falls. Coming out above the American falls, we could look down into the seething white foam below, and there was a tiny steamboat lashing about. "The Maid of the Mist" was painted on the bow, and we immediately decided that that boat was our oyster. Going to the superintendent of the state reservation, Mr. Francis

WOODRING WITH HIS FIANCEE

Seyfried, We showed our literature about Don Rafael and Dick Applegate, and told our story. He was very pleasant and told us that he used to know a Dick Applegate that got kicked out of West Point. Ah! He gave us a nod. Here's what it said: "Who is My Concern? Please accord Donald A. Rafael and Dick Applegate the courtesies of the reservation with admission to concessions during this date. Superintendent." Pretty nice.

The water below the falls was reached by an elevator, and then we waited a few minutes for the boat to come in. Once aboard we were given rubber hats and stilly looking rubber boots to don. There's a good chance for a pun wrapped up in that last sentence, but I'll let it go. The rubber uniforms looked about ten cash customers and Don and I made the trip. The Maid of the Mist plows her way up through the whirlpools and rapids, pitching violently, amid a shower of heavy spray.

Right to the foot of the American falls, where we could hardly see the tops of water coming down on us for the fog and mist. Like the guy who couldn't see the forest for all the trees. Excuse me. Then we headed right out into the middle of the river, and towards the Canadian, or Horseshoe falls. The boat wouldn't have a chance in the cauldron below that mighty cataract, but it went so close that it was being tossed about like a cork before it finally did turn and flash down the river. We docked on the Canadian side for a few minutes to pick up passengers, and then re-crossed the tiny bridge to rejoin the rest of the way to do it. When we left the boat, an immigration officer, stopped us and asked of what country we were citizens.
