

ROOSEVELT LUCK BRINGS MIRACLES IN WALL STREET

It has been maintained so persistently as henchmen no longer marvel at it. They bank on it.

Whenever he speaks and whatever he says, the market goes up. When he says he wants currency stabilization and tariff adjustments, the financial world shouts hurra. Three weeks later when he says he doesn't want those things, they shout two hurra's.

The market goes a little higher each time.

The inner circle was talking the matter over at a recent private session.

Postmaster General Farley recalled that it rained only one day when Roosevelt was out on the road during the last campaign. On every other day he had good political weather. It rained other places, but not where he was.

Another friend pointed out what recently happened on the Roosevelt yachting cruise. Fog had hemmed him in. He heard that a crowd was gathering at Campello to receive him at 4 p. m. Natives said the fog would not lift for 24 hours. His associates called automobiles and urged him to make the last leg of the trip that way.

"Instead he sailed out into the ocean. Within 30 minutes the fog lifted. Sailing was clear from there on."

A skeptic broke into the conversation to suggest:

"If he is as good as that, why didn't he get out on the waves and walk up to Campobello?"

The answer from a Roosevelt leader was:

"He is saying that until next time."

The prize remark about the Roosevelt luck came in a similar gathering just after the election. His close friend, Frank Walker, shook his head and said:

"God certainly has His arms around that boy."

Probably the only thing remarkable about the Roosevelt luck is that we have just come out of a bad luck period. Mr. Hoover had nothing else. Everything he said sent the market down. Mr. Roosevelt could probably say some of those exact same things and send it up.

The root of the thing is public psychology. Mr. Roosevelt has it with him. Mr. Hoover did not.

The complete international banking picture surrounding Norman Davis did not come out at the senate investigation.

His technical adviser in Europe was Allen W. Dulles. Mr. Dulles was an attorney for J. P. Morgan. At least the Dulles law firm has handled much of the Morgan business.

Some of the existing officials of the state department also have Wall Street pasts which the senate may get around to some day.

The trouble with the Davis picture is that a skillful lawyer might make it appear Davis influenced the state department to ratify some of these foreign bond issues.

The Peruvian issue is supposed to have been worked up by a South American banking representative who thought he could not get departmental approval for the loan. Afterward, Mr. Davis was called in and was paid $35,000 for his legal advice.

Associated with him in the transaction was a man who now is one of the economic advisers of the department.

Another higher state department official was formerly chairman of the protective Peruvian bond committee formed by the National City bank and J. and W. Seligman.

You cannot turn around in elite foreign affairs circles without bumping into those who are smeared with the bond mess.

The time will come to start calling names if the state department ever approves another foreign issue. It won't.

Certain New York banking authorities came running recently with the story that the government was going to lend the railroads $500,000,000 to buy new equipment.

Those handling the railroad question for the administration nearly wept for joy. They said: "We don't know anything about it, but we hope it is true."

The situation on that is the government has been trying to make the railroads take some money for new equipment. They are in the last stages of changing their minds now.

Developments may be expected shortly.

The fat fellows in the stock market are supposed to be buying on every recession. They are moving from group to group, cleaning up as they go. Most climbed out of the market before the London conference but hopped back in when they could see their way more clearly. They are nearly on the long side now.

Mr. Coolidge's luck was even more widely respected than Mr. Roosevelt's is now. It never failed him during his entire administration.

The best indication that the Roosevelt international program is probably right is the fact that the French oppose it strongly.

FARMER SUICIDES BY CLIMBING POWER POLE

RACINE, Wis., July 7.—(UP)—Frank Smerechik 53, a farmer, today selected one of the most unusual ways to commit suicide ever recorded in Racine county.

Smerechik, who had been ill, climbed a 48-foot high pole, grasped a high-tension wire and died instantly when 27,000 volts of electricity passed through his body.

He is survived by his widow and two sons.
