WEATHER BRINGS SMALLEST GRAIN CROP FOR YEARS

Farm Administrators Going Ahead With Plans to Make Smaller Yields Fashionable for American Farmer

By ROY F. HENDRICKSON
Associated Press Staff Writer

WASHINGTON, July 12.—(AP)—American farmers face the prospect of their smallest grain and corn harvest in decades, but farm administrators are going right ahead today with plans to make smaller crops the future fashion.

The worst crop weather in 50 years—provided by droughts, excessive heat, storms, grasshoppers and insects—is responsible for what in many areas will be a total crop failure with yields lowered through most of the grain and corn belts far below average.

Nature Poor Balance.

But nature's method of curtailing production is unsatisfactory, says Secretary Wallace. It brings tragedy to some and higher prices to those who are lucky enough to raise something.

He made this plain after reading estimates of the crop reporting board forecasting the smallest wheat crop since 1893, one of the four smallest corn harvests in 32 years and the lightest crop of oats since 1897.

Through the farm adjustment act, he says it will be possible to bring about a uniform reduction of output by co-operative action of farmers, thus reducing the supply of farm commodities and increasing prices to a point where farm purchasing power will be returned to pre-war level. That applies, he says, to cotton as well as grains and corn.

May Forget Figures.

He said that the exceedingly short grain crop, while solving to some extent the surplus carry-over from last year "can easily cause both farmers and city people to lose sight of the fact that we are still planting more acres to grain than can be consumed in this country or sold at a fair price abroad."

"The unusual weather conditions of this year and higher prices resulting will distort the judgment of the farmers of the United States as to what they should plant next year unless we are able to co-operate in some effective way under the mechanism of the agricultural act," he asserted.

Area reduction of wheat to that required under the wheat plan, he said, will not be determined until after the London wheat conference and establishment of the significance of this year's small crop. George N. Peek, chief administrator, said that the small crop in no way will affect the determination of farm administrators to continue in effect the 30 cents per bushel wheat processing tax which became effective Sunday.

The board's estimates indicated an aggregate crop of wheat, corn, oats, barley, rye and flaxseed of 3,763,204,000 bushels, a total of 1,408,996,000 below last year.
