

NEW 'CAVE CITY' RISING ON SITE OLD MINE TOWN

Near the old mining "diggins" which sent echoing through the hills the voices of 3000 Chinamen...

Ignored in the naming are the stories of Captain Jack's last fight, and of "Susanne of Kerbyville," a figure known to all men...

But today, as then, the builders of the town are coming from California, and in such numbers they have increased by 150 per cent...

A new post office has been granted the new town, fed by the Redwoods highway, which has opened up the heart of the Illinois valley...

Farm houses, neighboring the town, are arising in promising numbers on soil, where free water rights date back to 1854...

Swimming in the Illinois river, upon which the town is located, is a popular sport with many people, and a temperature 10 degrees lower than that of Grants Pass...

Tourists, visiting the Oregon Caves, come through the town in important numbers and continue to Waldo to visit the mines...

The historical background of the country too intrigues the tourists, who visit the old home sites and listen to stories of the old timers...

It's the oldest and the newest place in Oregon, the visitors say.
