

STAGE ALL SET FOR FEHL TRIAL IN BALLOT CASE

Main Actors in Scene Move to Klamath Falls for Opening of Court Monday—Jury to Come Easy

The state of Oregon today had about completed preliminary arrangements for the trial of Earl H. Fehl, county judge, charged with ballot-theft, and fifth of the score or more of defendants to face a jury. Fehl will be tried in Klamath Falls, by virtue of a change of venue to Klamath county, granted to the defense this week.

Deputy District Attorney George W. Nelson, today left Klamath Falls, joining Assistant Attorney General Ralph E. Moody. Judge George P. Skipworth, who will preside, is also on the ground.

Stage All Set
The stage is all set for the start of the case, Monday morning, having legal moves by the defense, which are not considered likely.

Selection of a jury is expected to be short, as scores of Klamath county people have never heard of the ballot theft cases, and have no opinions or interest. The jury list has been ordered to report Monday morning at 9:30 o'clock.

First of the state witnesses have been ordered to report Monday afternoon. These include the Sexton brothers, Wesley McKittick, Virgil Edgington, and others who have pleaded guilty to participation in the vote-stealing. Other state witnesses will be E. A. Fleming, Earl Bryant, and James D. Gaddy, who admit a role in the crime.

New Witnesses
The state is expected to call to the stand a number of witnesses who have not testified in the previous ballot-theft trials.

The trial is expected to last the better part of two weeks. All the remaining ballot theft trials have been moved to Klamath county. Tom L. Brecheen of Ashland, mentioned in the testimony to date, as a busy worker around the courthouse on the night of February, conferring, directing, and guarding, is scheduled to go on trial following the Fehl case.

Brecheen is the "forgotten man" of the turmoil. Arrested on February 25, unlike all the rest, bonds have never been provided for him, and his calling has been limited to a few "congressmen." There has been spasmodic but unsuccessful effort to secure his release.

Here Two Years
Brecheen has been a resident of the valley for about two years, coming here from Alameda county, California, and locating at Ashland, where he immediately became an active political worker, and secured campaign in the south and east, and registrations in the 1932 primary county.

Last January Brecheen became one of the so-called "courthouse pots," eating many of his meals, and sleeping there. When L. A. Banks, former local agitator, convicted slayer, organized the self-styled "Good Government congress," Brecheen enrolled and was the "story-teller" of the convales and assemblies. It was Brecheen's job to "make 'em laugh," and his platform appearances were never marked by fiery orations and wild charges.

A Friend of F. R.
He claimed to be "a personal friend of President Roosevelt of 25 years standing." When a "congresswoman" doubted the claim, Brecheen dared her to send a telegram to Washington, D. C., which was done at county expense, it is said. This was about the time other "congress" leaders were alleging intimate acquaintance with chief justices, senators and cabinet officials, to impress the rank and file.

Following Brecheen, the indictments against J. Croft, "the man in the horse-hair coat," Oliver Martin, former Klamath county resident, and Claude Ward, brother-in-law of Banks will be aired. All enacted minor roles on the night of the vote-stealing, as vandals and messengers, the state alleges, and were around and about the courthouse.

Your Orchestra Seat's an Auto Ushers at This Theater Use Bikes

By C. E. BUTTERFIELD
CAMDEN, N. J. (AP)—Drive right in and see the movies—that's the idea behind a new theater here.

Seats in this new open air movie house—it covers an area of 250,000 square feet—are the cars themselves. Richard M. Hollingshead, Jr., planned it.

Cars in Semi-Circles
In place of the conventional theater layout, there are seven tiers of parking inclines so arranged in a semi-circle that each row will accommodate several dozen cars.

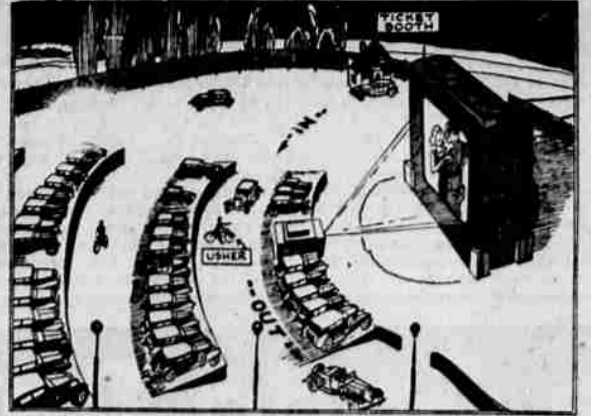

The rows are 50 feet wide, leaving plenty of space for parking and at the same time giving room for arriving and incoming cars to find or leave a "seat" without disturbing anyone.

Screen Is Huge
The front row is not necessarily better than any other position in the theater, for there is a huge screen and adequate sound equipment. Engineers designed apparatus that would give enough volume to cover the huge arena and to make it possible to hear above noises made by motors.

Three huge loudspeakers concealed behind the 60-foot screen project the sound evenly throughout the enclosure.

On one occasion during an electrical and rain storm the show went right on, losing only three cars—of the open type.

There's no parking problem for movie fans at a new theater in Camden, N. J., built on this general plan. You take the car in with you, escorted by an usher on a bicycle.

ADDED THRILL FOR MATTERN ON HOP TO ALASKA SHORE

Trip With Russian Aviator Climaxes Attempt to Girde Globe—Gas Runs Out Before Shore Sighted

NOOME, Alaska, July 21.—(AP)—Jimmie Mattern, luckless round-the-world flier, offered late last night to do "anything he could" to aid Wiley Post, when he heard that Post had disabled his plane in landing at Flat, Alaskan, after being "lost" seven hours.

"I'm sure sorry to hear he suffered such a misfortune," Mattern said. "If there's anything I can do, I'll put forth every effort to help him get going again, so that he can break the round-the-world record."

Offers Post Help
During the afternoon, Mattern had arrived from Anadyr, Siberia, in a Soviet airplane, to be greeted by his relief expedition. In a plane flown by Pilot Levonovsky, the flight was made here from Asia, arriving at 1:10 p. m. (7:10 p. m. E. S. T.) Mattern had crashed on June 14, near Anadyr.

"If Post's plane is out of commission," Mattern said, "I'll offer him the ship flown by my relief expedition."

Mattern described his flight from Anadyr in the Soviet plane as filled with thrills, relating how they had been stranded on a reef in the Anadyr river, that they made a number of attempts before being able to get off the bay at Anadyr, that they had to return to St. Lawrence Island after once passing that point, and that finally they ran out of gas as they finally neared the Alaskan shore.

Climax of Thrills
"I thought my flight from New York to where my plane crashed was full of thrills," he said, "but this last flight had them all stopped."

The start was made on Wednesday, he said, but landing had to be made on St. Lawrence Island and they spent the night there in their sleeping bags. "Just like Eskimos."

After running out of gas as they neared the Alaskan coast, a tugboat found them and towed them into Nome harbor, he said.

"There is one thing I will say about my stay at Anadyr," Mattern said, "and that is that the Russians certainly took wonderful care of me and I wish at this time to thank the entire crew of the Russian plane for their efforts in coming up into the Arctic from Khabarovsk to bring me over to Nome."

Saved Few Parts
Because of the long distance from Anadyr at which his plane crashed, Mattern said, he only brought out with him his instrument panel, the propeller and the motor, with the aid of Russians. He brought them with him to Nome in the Russian plane.

"My plane, when I crashed, was stranded so far away from the beach that I gave up any hope of getting it out."

"During my flight they acted confident and showed the utmost courage in the face of the gas shortage and the possibility that we might have to set down in the sea and await rescue, which luckily didn't happen."

"They are all fine young upright citizens of Soviet Russia and as far as the flying game goes, they're just some of the boys and real pilots."

Mattern and his Russian rescuers today were being entertained by the citizens of Nome. The Russians were interested in the city because of the world-wide reputation of its gold producing camps.
