Tour in Quebec Reminds Applegate of European Trip Sans Annoyances

St. Jovite, Province of Quebec, Canada, July 15.

To the Editor:

Don and I are about 75 miles north of Montreal today, and intend to be that much more before night-fall. The old Dodge has run perfectly all the way, and we haven't had a bit of trouble. The night that I wrote the last letter we left at one o'clock, and drove about 50 miles out of the city, and camped on a little side-road on a private estate owned by some woman in Paris, France. The car is fixed up for a bed, and as we weren't bothered, we slept till noon. We drove about a hundred miles that day, stopping off en route to go swimming in a river along the road. There was a nice big canoe there, so we appropriated it for a couple of hours. Don claimed that he never sun-burfled. He did that time. He looked like an Indian blanket the next day.

I did a little better, in that I KNEW I sunburned, so I stayed out of the sun most of the time. We're both getting nicely tanned now.

Farmer Relents.

As evening drew on we again looked for a place to camp, and on a little side road we found a good secluded place and started our fire for supper. Just as the coffee was beginning to boil the farmer who owned the place drove by in a wagon and told us to be on our way. We had to repack all our stuff, and just as we drove back onto the road he and his hired man came up. They said they hated to chase us out, but that they were afraid of fire, but that we could camp in their dooryard. We accepted this offer.

He brought out an oil stove for us to cook on, and then changed his mind and invited us in to do our cooking in the kitchen. When our supper had been cooked and devoured, we sat and talked to the farmer and his wife for an hour or so, and by that time we had been invited to sleep in the house. The next morning they also invited us to breakfast with them, and then showed us about the farm. Their name was Gonyo, and they mentioned that the French spelling was Gagnon. Maybe they're some relation to Joe Gagnon in Medford, although they didn't know.

Mrs. Gagnon showed us how to fry ham in water to get the salt out of it. We'd have had to throw it away, otherwise. Gee, it was terrible. I've seen Mom doing the same thing, but didn't know why. We're getting to be quite famous cooks now. This morning we had hot-cakes. We burnthe first several; some were pretty good, and the rest of the batter we threw away. The jam was swell, however. I wish we had Fred (Simeon Gunch) Colvig here to cook for us. He makes swell biscuits and things. Get him to cook things for you some day. I used to go down and look hungrily at his hot bread just out of the oven, and waste a lot of good hints on how good it looked. He'd just say that they couldn't cut it 'till supper time. In such a decisive voice, too, that I just didn't have the nerve to ask why not. I've eaten plenty at the Colvig residence tho. Thanks again, Mrs. Colvig.

To get back to this drivel about the trip. At the border they took all our cigarettes away besides five packages each and the ones they couldn't find. They asked us if we had any ditched in the suit-case, and we said "no," which was correct. They then asked if there were any under the seats, and again we said "no." They asked about the bed clothes as a hiding place, and the tool box. The answer was always "no," but if they'd said hidden in the sugar and beans they'd have had us!

Wearing Camouflage.

We're letting our beards grow, and we look like the devil. That's the only way to describe it. Next week they ought to look pretty good. On the way up we stopped and went in swimming in Lake Champlain. The water was much warmer than we expected, probably because the whiskers kept our faces warm.

When we got to Montreal, a city of nearly a million, we saw the funniest looking cops we've seen yet, and that's saying more than you perhaps realize. They wear silly looking white helmets, and bawl you out in French. It seems that nearly all the people around here speak that language. The street signals are in both English and French, but up here it is just French.

This little village of St. Jovite is the most interesting one I've ever seen. It's a sleepy little burg about the size of Jacksonville, and did I have a tough time trying to get the typewriter I'm using. Only a few people in the place speak English. The rest just gibber when you try to talk to them. The two or three who speak the King's English work in the hotel and the service station. This is the service station tool I'm using now. I think it needs a new carburetor. Maybe Mr. Bierma of the Medford Typewriter Exchange could make it work properly, but it would require years of effort.

All these little villages have beautiful churches. They are built of gray sandstone, with slate roofs, and the roofs glint like gold in the sun. The Catholic population seems to be very religious. Tiny roadside shrines are to be seen on the crest of every hill, and in the evening you see the whole town on their way to or from services in the churches. No matter how delapidated the homes may be, the church is always lovely.

It's hardly believable that we are only a day's drive from the United States. The customs and everything seem so foreign to us. This part of the trip has been the most successful of all, so far. Except that it is going to cost me 18 cents to send this story to Medford by air mail. That's just twice the domestic rate.

The country roads that we are now traveling are lined with two-wheeled carts of the "old country," and some are so heavily laden they look as the slightest shifting of the weight would pick the poor old horse right up off its pins. Many of the people ride bicycles, and a great many drive horses, buggies and coaches. It's just as though the calendar had been turned back 25 years, except for the occasional car you see. Most of the cars are of American make, besides a few English Austins and Rolls-Royces. The Austins are both of the familiar "American" Austin size, and one I've never seen before, about the size of a Chevrolet.

Tour Without Trouble.

The small one would be the most appropriate size for this country though. Gas in Canada costs 30 cents a gallon, although you get nearly five quarts to the "imperial" gallon. And oil is 40 cents a quart. Aside from that we can't understand why more Americans don't make this trip. It has all the thrill of a visit to a foreign country, without the pain in the neck which comes with associating with steamship companies.

Another funny thing about this country. One must have a license to operate a radio receiving set. And American cigarettes, where you can buy them at all, cost 35c a package. The Canadian ones are not bad, although they, too, are rather expensive. The most popular brands are Winchester, Guini Gold, Buckingham, Players, and a host of others.

Saints Furnish Names.

Most of the villages are named after a saint. In fact, all of them that we've gone through since leaving Montreal are. St. Martin, St. Therese, St. Augustin, St. Jerome, St. Adele, Ste. Agathe des Montes, St. Faustin, and then St. Jovite. Just follow those villages next time you're in Canada, and you'll be right here, and you'll like it.

Mom is sore at me. I got a letter from her in New York the other day, and I don't think she'll mind if I show it to you. "Dear Dick: Here is a copy of your last letter to the Tribune. (That was to satisfy my ego, so I know she still loves me.) Since you aren't enough interested in your family to write, I won't bore you with any details.—Mom. P. S.: Why the liquor price list? Just to fill space, or pure ornerinessY"

Here's my reply:

My dear Mom—It was neither, although the first comes nearer to being correct. But if I wanted to be ornery, I'd have something in about that farmer's daughter! Gee, I feel ornery!

As far as not writing home is concerned, I never get a chance to write. Don is always using the pen to write to his girl-friend in California. I'm trying to promote a fight between them, and when it is promulgated may be I'll have a chance to write. Until then you'll all have to read the papers, I guess. That's what Will Rogers does.

That's all for today, mon enfants, so au revoir—

DICK APPLEGATE.

STOCKS IN RALLY ON FINAL DEALS HEAVY TRADING

NEW YORK, July 22.—(AP)—The New York Stock Exchange announced today that beginning Monday it would open at noon until further notice.

NEW YORK, July 22.—(AP)—Stocks closed with a rally today after two strenuous hours in which fluctuations, though extremely erratic, were much narrower than those of yesterday.

Final prices were mostly above yesterday's close and shares that showed net losses were well above their lows of a mid-morning setback. The market had a number of $1 to $3 advances.

Rallying at the opening, prices slumped later when free waves of liquidation from impaired margin accounts rolled on to the stock exchange, but supporting orders caught the leader and quotations stiffened in the final quarter hour.

United Aircraft closed at $30.50, up 50 cents; Continental can $58.25, up $2; Du Pont $67.50, up $1.50; International Telephone $13, up 75 cents; Crown Cork & Seal $39, up 50 cents; Consolidated Gas $51, off $1; Canada Dry Gingerale $24, up $3; Southern Pacific $24.87, unchanged; General Motors $25.62, up $1; U. S. Steel $52.25, off 25 cents; Chrysler $26.72, off 37 cents; American Telephone $118.50, off 50 cents; New York Central $39.25, up 62 cents; American Sugar $59, up $3; Union Carbide $42, up $3.
