

PERSPIRATION, NOT INSPIRATION MAIN NEED SAYS AUTHOR

By Eva Nealon Hamilton
'It takes perspiration, not inspiration to write'—that's the way Hal G. Everts, famous naturalist and writer of nature stories (fact and fiction), put it this morning, when he stopped in Medford to quaff a stein of beer before continuing to the Fur, Fish and Game farm, north of Prospect, where he plans to spend the summer. (In communion with little Billy Ground Squirrel, if you please).

NO BOND ISSUE ON SEWAGE PLANT IF GIFT IS WITHHELD

If federal funds, applied for, through the National Industrial Recovery act, are not granted, the bonds to be voted by Medford citizens for sewage construction this coming Friday will not be issued. Mayor E. M. Wilson pointed out this morning, reminding the public that no action will be taken by the city without the loan of federal funds.

STATE WITNESS EXPENSE SAVED BY AGREEMENT

Arrangements have been completed between the sheriff's office and Assistant Attorney General Ralph Moody, who is in charge of prosecution in the trial of Earl H. Fehl for complicity in the ballot thefts here, now being held in Klamath Falls, to transport state witnesses from here to Klamath Falls on the day they are needed, thus saving the state the cost of holding the witnesses several days in Klamath Falls.

The witnesses will still get their mileage under the law, it was pointed out, but they will be subpoenaed on the day they will testify, instead of several days before, and will be paid only for the time they are used, instead of pay them two dollars a day for standing around several days awaiting their return on the stand.

It is believed the arrangements by the state will save the county considerable money. It is not known whether or not the defense will permit the arrangement to apply to defense witnesses. Those witnesses who have already been subpoenaed are called for Thursday, it is understood.

Wedding Bells

Announcement has been made of the wedding June 14 of Mrs. Ruth Chinn of this city, to Wendell Phillips, who resides near Bend. The ceremony was performed in Bend. Mrs. Phillips plans to leave with her two sons for that city this fall, before school opens.

At least, said he, when his bees, so rudely interrupted, he finds himself in the more of the former and less of the latter, when he writes stories. It's hard work, boys and girls, not genius! "I never had any of that", Mr. Everts declared with a smile that rolled a wrinkle up to the crown of his panama hat, as he further denied press comments, which have accredited quotations to the contrary to his tongue.

He's going to do some writing in southern Oregon, he admitted, at his favorite haunt, the Fur, Fish and Game farm, where he visited a few years ago. What the writing will be about, he declared he didn't know, and assured his listeners that he will be so stork of the thing before it is done, he will wonder if the consuming public will take it (at advertising rates). And then the story will appear.

"I do get darned sick of my yarns," he repeated. "People say they learn to love them; I don't. It's hard work to make things run along smoothly. I don't write easily." To which remark, George Ferguson, who is mortgaging back to the farm with Mr. Everts today, raised his eyebrows in that certain way, which says, ("Mr. Everts is a modest man").

The author, who has made famous heroes of animals, great and small of the northwest, is accompanied to southern Oregon by his son, Hal G. Everts, Jr., student at Stanford (and the brains of the family, according to his pa).

The two will remain in the great expanse of outdoors, which the upper Rogue river section offers, until fall. For Mr. Everts likes the animals of the northwest best of all. He never kills them for sport, he said today. He killed many in his younger days to satisfy his appetite. In his collection he does not seem heads, but furs. The latter seem to fascinate him, judging from his conversation, which took on added enthusiasm this morning each time he referred to the fine colorings found in the martens, the red fox and the many other animals he knows intimately.

When he gets a lot of money and takes up an avocation in place of a vocation, he's going to have a farm, where he can raise animals, just for the fun of it and make some experiments, he has always longed to try. Asked if he had hopes of developing such a project at the Fur, Fish and Game Farm, he answered, "I haven't any hope any more. But I do want to raise some plovers before they become extinct. Asked where plovers are located now, he answered: "They aren't located anywhere. Just here and there a few remain."

Mr. Everts also wants to raise martens and fishers, the latter just glorified martens. And he's going to do some trapping at the same farm this summer. "I'm the world's worst fisherman," he described himself, "But one of the best trappers (I can say that with ease, this isn't the season for trapping)." He added in a miniature strange interlude all his own. "I've always had a yen for animals," Mr. Everts explained the subjects of his many beloved stories. "I haven't any pets, because it would be a crime to have them in Los Angeles, where I now live. But when I get back in the sticks again. That will be different. "When I hunt and trap, I don't work," he talked on, "I lie on a stump and take the direction of the wind and they come to me. It's easier on this bay window of mine. "When I write, it's not any 'art for art's sake.' It's to keep the wolf from the door." To which declaration, Mr. Ferguson gave his eyebrows another lift.

Speaking of the mountain regions he enters in search of subjects, Mr. Everts stated, "There's nothing dangerous about it. The animals are all right and the few people, you come upon in places like that. Well, you can always depend on their own best all right if you attend to your being business."

Asked why he chose to go into the fur business and on into writing, Mr. Everts replied, "I got tired of fitting shoes on peoples' feet." From the shoe business in Kansas he went into Wyoming and established a fur farm, where he had 750 skunks, along with a lot of other things. He "never got much ahead of the bounds at any time," he stated. So when there was nothing else to do he wrote and that's how it all happened. Now he is building him a home at the Fur, Fish and Game Farm.

MEETING CALLED TO SET MINIMUM BARTLETT PRICE

David Rosenberg and Raymond Reiter, shippers' representatives, elected from Medford, are leaving today for Portland to attend the meeting of the Bartlett Pear Commodity committee. They will meet tomorrow in the northern city with representatives of all sections of the northwest and the canners in an attempt to establish a minimum price for pears.

Before leaving, the two representatives today, asked that no growers in this locality sign cannery contracts until they learn of the outcome of tomorrow's meeting. "It will be to their advantage to wait," Mr. Rosenberg stated this morning. The two Medford men are among representatives elected to meet and develop plans under the national industrial recovery act. Present at tomorrow's session will be representatives from Hood River, Yakima and Wenatchee, as well as the Rogue River valley.

MINERS CONTINUE WINNING STREAK

Winning their third consecutive game of the season, after a series of defeats earlier this summer, the Jacksonville Miners yesterday defeated the Elk Creek Brush Marines, 20 to 14. The Jacksonville nine counted six points in the first inning, and maintained the lead throughout. Next Sunday the Miners will play the undefeated Gold Hill team. In Sunday's encounter, Dick Frazier, third baseman, scored five hits in the five times at bat. "Punk" Dunnington is coaching the Miner team, and V. J. Beach is manager.

WILLIAM M'KAY CALLED TO REST

William McKay a resident of Medford for the past 22 years, passed away at his orchard home on Route 1 Saturday evening, aged 86. Mr. McKay was born at Cullen, Scotland, and at the age of 26 came to the United States in December, 1873. He was united in marriage to Elsie Forbes in New York. They made their home there until 1882 when they moved to Valley City, North Dakota, where they resided for 20 years. In September, 1909, they came west and have made their home in the Rogue river valley since. Mr. McKay was a very active member of Valley City, North Dakota, and was a member of the Medford Presbyterian church.

He is survived by W. J. McKay, Reedley, Cal.; Mrs. Harvey C. Kendall, Chicago; A. E. Ralph and Elizabeth McKay of Medford, also two grandchildren of Medford, Jeanne Elizabeth and Bruce. His wife, Mrs. McKay, preceded him in May, 1933. Funeral services will be held at the Conger funeral parlors Tuesday at 2:30 p. m. Rev. W. J. Howell will conduct the services and burial will be made in the Skakyou memorial park.

● ABOVE—SAFE...OR OUT! Millions hang breathlessly on the words of Edson Brewster, master telegrapher for Western Union, as he taps out each exciting play for the tickers and bulletin boards that reach from Maine to Tokio! Before the crowd in the grand stand knows what has happened, Brewster has reported the play.

● LEFT—THERE GOES YOUR OLD BALL GAME! You wouldn't be human if you didn't get excited and wrought up when the home team puts the game on ice. It's a time when you want to smoke a lot. You will find Camels milder, and your nerves will be grateful!

● EDSON BREWSTER, veteran of every World's Series for over 20 years, says: "Camels never disturb my nerves."

Steady Smokers turn to Camels

"It's some strain being the public's eyes at big sporting events," says Edson Brewster, who clicks out the play-by-play for Western Union. "I have to see everything and I have to see it right. I've got to keep my eyes on the field and a steady hand on the telegraph key every second. No wonder I am a steady smoker! But I do not worry about my nerves. I have smoked Camels for years. They are mild, and never disturb my nerves. I like them better."

Camels, being made from finer, MORE EXPENSIVE tobaccos than any other popular brand, have brought new smoking satisfaction to thousands of men and women who had never known that a cigarette could be so mild... so rich and pleasing. Try Camels. Your own experience will soon reveal why steady smokers turn to Camels.

SOME RUM LAWS STILL ON BOOKS

Although Oregon voters swarmed to the polls last Friday to swamp the prohibition amendment to the state constitution under nearly a two to one vote, there still remains on statute books several laws governing sale and manufacture of intoxicating liquors, according to G. A. Coddling, district attorney. Repeal of the Anderson act at the election last fall, Coddling said, repealed only part of the enforcement code, and repeal of the constitutional amendment did not effect the laws against manufacture and sale. General opinion is, however, that these laws will be changed at the next meeting of the legislature to regulatory laws instead of prohibition laws, to comply with the public opinion so definitely expressed last Friday.
