SURPLUS CATS OF CITY A PROBLEM FOR HUMANE UNIT

There are too many cats and there is too much meowing in the city of Medford, is the complaint today of the Jackson County Humane society. And the members mean "cats," the furry kind, they declared in stating their case through Mrs. Sidney Richardson, secretary, to Mayor E. M. Wilson.

The mayor agreed with them but offered no solution, as to "what's to do."

Thirty-five cats have been disposed of in a humane manner at the shelter already this month, Mrs. Richardson declared, and the humane society has received no aid from any place. All the animals there are reported as strays, which means nobody pays for their care or disposal.

The humane society is now receiving no aid from city, county or state, so someone is going to have to help solve the surplus cat problem. Call upon call comes to the society to care for strays, which wouldn't be in circulation, Mrs. Richardson said, if the owners of cats would dispose of the kittens in a humane manner as soon as they are born, keeping just one male. And that's what the society is asking people to do in the future, for the good of the public and the good of the cats.

And then in defense of cats, described as the world's leading murderers of birds, Mrs. Richardson stated today that their tendencies in that direction, too could be curbed if people would feed them well and keep them locked up at dawn.

As proof of her statement she referred to a family of finches, residing, undisturbed, in a nest at the humane shelter, where many cats also make their home, at least temporarily.

Medford's own baritone, James Stevens, accompanied by Sebastain Apollo, will supply the musical part of the program at the chamber of commerce banquet for the Portland caravan tonight.

Neither Mr. Stevens nor Mr. Apollo need any introduction to a Medford audience and the chamber of commerce is very grateful for the courtesy extended by these two sterling artists.
