KERBY 3-C CAMP HAS NEWSPAPER. With the publication of a mimeographed paper each week, the CCC camp Kerby, located at Selma, puts into the news items the camp schedule, which includes for next week a baseball game on Sunday between Mt. Reuben and the camps boys, and on Monday, Mt. Reuben and Camp Kerby.

On the schedule for Tuesday, Mayor Stockwell of Grants Pass will speak, and baseball is chalked up again for Wednesday. For Thursday, the Grants Pass National Guards will entertain and Friday will be the baseball team dance.

Sub camps are being established on Woods creek and at Swede Basin. The woods creek camp is located about two miles south of Walden, historical southern Oregon mining town, which is 21 miles southeast of the main camp. Swede Basin is about 15 miles northwest of the main camp. Each camp is to have 35 men to do construction and maintenance work, as well as cooks, supply men, and a first aid man included in each of the groups.

MISSISSIPPI REPEAL VOTE IS ADVOCATED. JACKSON, Miss., July 28.—(AP)—A public declaration by Senator Pat Harrison favoring an early vote on repeal in Mississippi was interpreted by Democratic leaders today as an indirect appeal to Governor Connor for a prohibition session of the legislature.

It will end up by your being put on the spot.

rooms: the bedroom above; and the "shop," as Colin called it, on the ground floor, that opened, just as in the days of the old stable door, directly on the yard.

It was night, near to midnight, and Colin sat now with his elbows propped on the edge of his slatted desk, his chin cupped in his hands, his quiet light brown eyes fixed introspectively on the figure of a young man of about his own age who was ensconced in a lounging chair opposite the desk and who at the moment had just gulped down a stiff spot of neat whisky.

Colin's companion had many aliases; but when, some thirty years ago, they had both been born in the same obscure little village in the western part of the state, the other had been christened John, and his surname had been Turner. He had flaming red hair. He had never been called John; he had always been known as Reddy.

They had been close chums through the village school days. Later Colin had taken a university course followed by a postgraduate one abroad, specializing in modern languages; Reddy, on the other hand, had followed a numerous course of instruction under various wardens in various institutions that were quite as famous in their own way, as were the seats of learning Colin had attended.

At the age of fifteen Reddy had run away from home, and it was don't say it isn't; I'm only saying that what you're getting looks like nothing at all alongside of the real works.

"Then, perhaps," suggested Colin quizzically, "you can set me on the right track!"

"Sure!" Reddy shrugged his shoulders. "That's easy! Get into the racket yourself."

Colin heaved himself suddenly up from his seat and, circling the corner of the desk, broad-shouldered, a good six feet in height, stood towering over the man in the chair. Then he laid his hand on the other's shoulders.

The hint of banter was gone. "Why don't you cut it out, old man?" he asked.

Reddy's only answer was to fix his eyes abruptly on the toe of his boot.

Colin surveyed the other now in a grave and troubled way. There was age in what should have been a young face. The cheeks were thin and of an unhealthy pallor; the jet-black eyes were deep-set and burned too brightly. Colin's eyes roved over the trim, almost dapper little figure and rested speculatively for an instant on a significant, though almost imperceptible, bulge below the left shoulder of the other's coat.

"Why don't you cut it out, Reddy?" he prodded earnestly.

"I've thought of it," he said. "I suppose we all have—only most of us never get any farther than letting the idea buzz around in our heads a bit. It isn't so easy. I couldn't cut it out without ducking

The HIDDEN DOOR

BY FRANK L. PACKARD

Chapter One. IN EVENT OF DEATH. WE MURDERERS had been committed there in Hines gone by. There had been an interval of more than a few years between the two killings, and the one was in no way connected with the other except as to locale—for which reason, those who remembered and were superstitiously minded always claimed that some day sooner or later that same locale would inevitably be the scene of a third murder.

Its location—on a side street just off Washington-Square—afforded a certain seclusion and, for New York, a comparatively quiet retreat. Colin Hewitt was not superstitious; nor, indeed, was the previous tenant from whom, as it were, he had inherited the place—a fellow writer who, some two years ago, had left New York to make his home in the south of France.

It had once been a small stable. It was reached by a narrow passage-way from the street, and fronted on a diminutive yard which separated it from the dwelling to which in past years it had been a necessary adjunct.

Colin's friend had metamorphosed it into a combination of literary workshop and cozy digs. Colin had made no changes save, of course, to furnish it with his own effects.

Except for a bathroom and pantry-kitchen, it possessed but two not until a week ago that Colin, on one of his customary nightly prowls after "material," had bumped into the other in a joint of excessively ill repute run by one Nigger Joey. Since then—

"That's a laugh!" exclaimed Reddy Turner of many aliases. "You don't owe me any thanks, I've introduced you to some of my mob offhand-like; and that's as far as it'll ever go. But what I'm saying is that though the papers put you on the back and say you know your onions when it comes to writing crook stuff better than any other guy that ever dished it out, you're only kidding the public that hands you a handful of dough every time you bust into print."

Colin laughed easily. "You're good tonight, Reddy! Nothing like honest criticism. Don't spare my feelings. Go on."

"That's all right," granted Reddy. "Sure! Now that I'm at it, I'll get it off my chest. You go out at night visiting a lot of dumps and hang-outs; you know a lot of lags and cokes and a big shot or two; you're pals with some of the dicks down at the homicide bureau; you're in thick with the police reporters; and you go out and wrap your arms around the neck of any likely bum or dame you meet in the street or in the parks, bring them in here, where nobody's to know and where it's nobody's business, give them a snort and a bite, and frisk the history of their lives out of them."

"Everybody knows you're on the level and wouldn't squawk, but all you're getting out of it is what you call color, and the rest is your imagination. Maybe that's enough. I

Smoke was reported from three lookout stations, in the vicinity of Rocky Gulch, a short distance southeast of the Rand station and the fire warning was sent out. Some miners, who were working nearby, were able to put out the blaze without outside help, so the CCC men were not called.

The office of the district ranger complimented the Mt. Reuben camp on the efficient manner in which the men were equipped to go on the fire call and expressed a feeling of satisfaction in the general attitude of the camp members. That office feels that it is with such organizations that fire suppression work will be carried on this year with a high degree of efficiency and speed.
