

One-Man Business Is Tough Nut to Crack for Recovery Drive General

By HARRY FERGUSON, United Press Staff Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 3.—(UP)—Just as the temperature was boiling up above 95 today and the humidity was soaring like Professor Piccard on a clear day, somebody stepped up to General Hugh S. Johnson and innocently inquired how a businessman who doesn't employ anybody was going to reduce working hours of his employees.

That threw the whole national recovery program into chaos. There hasn't been so much excitement down there since the day when a lumberman called up and actually got to talk to Johnson after waiting only 35 minutes and being disconnected four times.

Well, the NRA went into conference on the question of whether Dominic Tuterwila, who plays the dual role of employer and employee at his fruit stand, should apply himself for a raise in pay and shorter hours and get a blue eagle, or should he be deprived of a blue eagle and allowed to pursue an untrammelled course of rugged individualism and vote the straight Republican ticket in 1936.

Out of that NRA conference came the answer—clear cut and definite. It was: "Yes, and again, No."

He will be allowed to display the blue eagle, but he will not be allowed to change the "We Do Our Part" to "I'm Doing My Part."

That's simple enough, but on the tangled question of ethics the NRA was strangely silent. Obviously, if Mr. Tuterwila doesn't raise his own pay he will not be doing his part. It is equally obvious that the only way he can raise his pay is to issue an order to himself to work longer hours. But he has signed an agreement with President Roosevelt to work shorter hours and not to reduce salaries.

It was suggested that a happy solution for Mr. Tuterwila would be to raise the price of an apple from 5 cents to 8 cents. Then, you see, he could work shorter hours and pay himself a larger salary. Right there, though, somebody called attention to section nine of the president's re-employment agreement which forbids increasing the price of any merchandise "more than is made necessary by replacement or invoice costs of merchandise." Apples selling at 5 cents each would promptly convert Mr. Tuterwila into a profiteer, and you better smile when you call anybody that, pardner.

Maybe we might as well forget the whole business.

GRANGE MASTER URGES SUPPORT IN WORK OF C-C

I. R. Kline Says Stronger Bond Between City and Rural Areas Woven By Great Get-together Picnic.

"As human happiness depends upon individual prosperity, it becomes the loyal and patriotic duty of every citizen and every organization to cooperate with the Medford Chamber of Commerce, which is striving diligently at this time to make President Roosevelt's National Recovery Act effective."

Such was the message brought to more than 2000 farmers, entertained here yesterday by Medford merchants at the picnic in the city park, when I. R. Kline, master of the Pomona Grange, expressed the sincere thanks and appreciation of the residents of the rural districts, invited to the very successful affair.

Appreciate Effort. "Having met here today as guests of the Medford Chamber of Commerce to partake of this grand and delicious barbecue luncheon and refreshments, we keenly appreciate the huge undertaking of the Chamber of Commerce of satisfying the appetites of several thousand hungry farmers," Mr. Kline declared. "True to reputation for doing things worthwhile, the Chamber of Commerce has made the festivities of the day a grand success."

"We hope that from this event may emanate a stronger friendship and a stronger spirit of cooperation between the residents of this city and those of every community in southern Oregon," Mr. Kline continued.

"Time will not permit the enumeration of the many achievements of our local chamber, and the valuable services given the farmers, dairymen and orchardists of this county. But those who have realized here for some time are aware of the fact that had it not been for this wonderful and powerful organization, we would not at this time enjoy the many improvements and developments of this beautiful city and valley.

Public Support Needed. "No organization can succeed unless every unit functions properly and is supported by the public. Government cannot function successfully and satisfactorily unless every branch of industry and trade receive their just and proportionate share of prosperity.

"Having experienced one of the most severe and destructive financial panics of all time, we are entering into an era of recovery and reconstruction. This means that many concessions and readjustments must be made. Particularly with reducing unemployment, and in increasing the purchasing power of our country to where it will be on a parity with production."

Pledged to Welfare. "In conclusion, let me say that the Grange is pledged to give its undi-
