MASTER MIND OF BALLOT STEALING UNABLE GET BOND

Fehl opposed this for some reason, and testimony in his trial showed he acted as advisor to Schermerhorn and counseled his absence from the state until the sheriff took office. The testimony also showed that Fehl had dictated Schermerhorn's appointments, in consideration of a $5000 loan from an Ashland friend.

Hectic efforts to thwart the re-Hectic efforts to thwart the re-Hectic efforts to thwart the re-

Following the first theft arrests Fehl attempted to issue habeas corpus papers for their release, and also attempted to issue a warrant for the arrest of officials engaged in nabbing ballot thieves.

Fehl himself listed as one of the defendants, remained in seclusion until he could furnish $15,000 bonds.

Fehl established a "county commissary" and testimony at his trial showed "Banks Guards" fed from it.

Fehl hurried charges right and left against his political foes, and as an outgrowth of them a county audit was ordered, which will be filed the last of the week. Fehl charged that county funds were misused.

Last of the ballot theft defendants to be brought to trial, Fehl asked three times for a change of venue before it was granted. The case was moved to Klamath county, where the jury returned a verdict of guilty in 12 minutes.

Disavowed G. G. C. The outstanding features of the trial, were Fehl's disavowal of membership in the "Good Government Congress," whose votes he sought, and whose meetings he addressed; and a feeble effort to shift the blame from his own shoulders to Schermerhorn and Brechen and Attorney Elton Watkins of Portland, who had honored him with their friendship.

Immediately following his sudden conviction Fehl was placed in the Klamath county jail, and Earl B. Day named as county judge.

Under Oregon law Fehl, convicted of a felony, is barred from ever holding an appointive office, or seeking an elective one.

The last chapter of his bitter and stormy life aged him 20 years, friends say.

With good behavior in prison, Fehl will be entitled to 16 months "good time" and will be eligible to parole in 32 months.

Fehl will join the "hog fuel" crew in his first two weeks in the penitentiary, after which he will be assigned to prison labor, as near as possible to his pursuit when free.

NEW YORK, Aug. 15—(AP)—Stocks maintained a fairly steady position today despite the uncertain grain situation at Chicago and a further rise of international dollar rates. While trading was at the slowest pace of the past several sessions, a late mild rally enabled several leaders to finish with small gains. Transfers approximated only 600,000 shares.

There was little in the news to rattle activity either among the bulls or bears. The public was virtually out of the market and floor traders accounted for most of the price fluctuations. Grains ended unchanged at their minimum rates. With the "pegging" of quotations at Winnipeg, where jumped some 4 cents a bushel there, but later lost more than half this gain.

Divorced Wife Held in Torch Death Ex-Mate

That the basin was one she used to water chickens. She said the basin and gasoline disappeared from a shed where the automobile, unused for weeks, had been stored, and the matches from her kitchen. The match box and basin were found near Hanson's body.

Mrs. Hanson's hair and eyebrows were badly singed. She told State's Attorney Robert Nash that she "got too close to the fire" in looking into the automobile to see if her daughter's body was there.

Nash said he would present the evidence to the October grand jury. The 12-year-old daughter, whose custody the dead man had held on Sundays and special occasions, discovered the fire from a window in her mother's home. She ran to the machine, found her father lying on its floor, his clothes aflame and rushed to a neighbor's to call aid.

Nash said Mrs. Hanson told him she was in the basement of her home when the fire was discovered. She collapsed when told of her husband's death.

No breaks in the gasoline line or tank of the machine were found to indicate the fire might have started there, officers said.

"There is every indication that the fire was set," said Nash. In addition to the basin and a box of partly burned matches found near the machine he said he had another clue which could not be revealed yet to strengthen his conviction of murder.
