SILVER SCREEN REVIEW

By Mary Greiner Kelly.

Once in awhile, story, director and actors all click at once. Then comes a play like "When Ladies Meet."

M. G. M. version of a famous stage success, which closes a two-day run at Hunt's Craterian tonight.

Sophisticated and subtle in dialogue, this super-polite parlor comedy is polished to 18-karat brilliance through intelligent interpretation.

Given the usual triangle situation, with unusually honest and fair-minded women forming the two important angles, the author has the latter meet, admire and understand each other. Then she brings in the offending male and shows him up to both of them.

The two ladies of course, are Ann Harding, the wife, and Myrna Loy, the authoress, whom the "misunderstood" husband, Frank Morgan, is misleading. Then there is Alice Brady, the scatterbrain, tactless widow, and Robert Montgomery, worshipful friend of the authoress, who delightfully complicates the situation.

The acting is flawless, individually and collectively. The spotlight, an evolving aura around the group, rests occasionally a little more heavily on one set of the shoulders than on another. Stage veteran Alice Brady, perhaps, holds center stage a bit more often than the rest, carrying the comedy with a deft, sure-fire stroke.

But the point this production establishes, is that on the screen, as well as on the legitimate, when the right artists get together, individual laurels are forgotten, and happily for all concerned, the play is the thing.

Laurel and Hardy Appear on Double Bill At Craterian

Garbed in outlandish wigs, plumed hats and costumes of the Robin Hood era, Laurel and Hardy make their latest appearance in "The Devil's Brother," a full length feature production that will occupy one-half of the Craterian theatre's Friday and Saturday program.

"Don't Bet on Love" with Lew Ayres and Ginger Rogers featured will be the other feature on the same program.

"The Devil's Brother" has two famous comedians as a pair of daring brigands whose adventures must certainly be the funniest in which these inimitable wits have yet been seen on the talking screen. They run the gamut of tomfoolery from flirting with milkmaids and being pursued by an unexpected bull to making a narrow escape from a hangman's noose and being engulfed in a variety of other hazardous and crazy adventures.

There is more to "The Devil's Brother" than humor, although of course the antics of its two clowns play an outstanding part in the film.

COURTHOUSE KEYS CARELESSLY GIVEN ARE ROUNDED UP

Round-up of the master keys of the courthouse is under way this week by the county court.

The master keys seemed to have been distributed rather indiscriminately during the short regime of the former county judge, Earl H. Pehl.

No accurate information is at hand as to just how many master keys were released. Several have been turned in. The county court plans slight changes in the locks to the county courthouse, to render the remaining outstanding keys useless.

It is not anticipated that anyone will endeavor to enter the courthouse now, but it is invoked as a precautionary measure.

All doors to county offices have been ordered locked at the close of the day's business, as well as the vault and safes containing valuable records. A close check will be kept on master keys.

Last January and February, there was considerable prowling around the courthouse at night, by unauthorized persons. This brought complaint from citizens without results.

Evidence in the Pehl trial showed that the ex-county judge was in possession of a master key era he was inducted into office. The state contended that Pehl and his lieutenant, Tom L. Brecheen of Ashland, through the means of this master key, entered the clerk's office last December, removed stickers from ballot pouches, and a few days later reported to the grand jury that "somebody has been tampering with the ballot pouches."

The county judge this week also
