Added Features On Craterian Program

Those who attended the matinee showing of "Tugboat Annie" at the Craterian Theater yesterday afternoon, were given better than an hour's run of short subjects covering a wide range from travelogues to newscasts to comedies and screen reviews.

Through a mixup at the exchange in Portland, the film was not put on the regular film truck and a special plane had to be chartered in order to get the show here for the afternoon showing. Although the plane left Portland at eleven in the morning—which ordinarily would have brought it into Medford not later than 1:30 in the afternoon—storms and the heavy smoke caused by forest fires delayed its arrival here until 3:00 o'clock at which time the film was rushed to the theater and put on the screen.

Those who had sat through the showing of "Tugboat Annie" at the Craterian considered themselves well repaid for their waiting however, when the Marie Dressler-Wallace Beery production was eventually flashed on the screen.
