

Inflation to Make Jobs, Stabilize Dollar Value

Income Taxes.
Example:
 We will now take the Bartlett pear industry in our own valley, keeping in mind that pile of waste pears, "sweetness rotting in the sunshine," east of Bear creek. In that pile of pears, and similar piles, is one-fourth of my crop and your crop, if you are raising pears. For the remaining three-fourths of our crop of Bartlett pears we received this year an average of less than $15 per ton. This is considerably less than the cost of production. Our canneries this season canned less than one hundred million cans of pears—less than one can for each person in the United States.

Now if the government puts to work five or six million heads of families now unemployed, and three million more find employment in commodity producing enterprises, there will be a 50 per cent increase in the value of commodities used. Instead of one hundred million cans of pears, it will take one hundred and fifty million cans to supply the increased demand. But statistics show that when our canneries put up one hundred and fifty million cans the average price paid to the growers is $60 per ton instead of $15 per ton we received this year. There would be no unmarketable surplus—nothing destroyed.

After the desired price level of commodities was reached through inflation and increased purchasing power, then the pear grower would have to turn over to the government annually an equivalent to the value of one-sixth of the season's production, since one-sixth of all commodities must go to support the families of the great army working on the left side for the government. I would have to pay, and other pear growers would have to pay over to the government, for this purpose, one-sixth of the $60 per ton received, or $10 per ton. This would still leave $50 per ton to the grower and he would market all his pears instead of three-fourths of his crop. The first year, while the increase in the volume of currency in use was necessary to bring up the price level, no income taxes would be collected from the pear grower, or anyone else, for the purpose of providing for the government "payroll." The payroll would simply be provided for the first year by currency inflation. The pear grower, as well as all others engaged in industry on the right side, could use all their net income to reduce indebtedness. No longer would one-sixth of the farmers' production be curtailed or destroyed. No more slaughtering of pigs. There would be a market for products and again supply and demand would operate to control production. No one would be driven to seek a Chinaman's existence on a subsistence farm.

Everyone engaged in business on the right side in commodity producing enterprises or the distribution of commodities would be affected in the same manner as the pear grower. The general increase in retail business and commodity production would be 50 per cent, that is, sixty billion dollars annually, instead of forty billion. After those engaged in private enterprise on the righthand side, began to get out of debt, that is, perhaps, after the first year, the government would begin to collect from them income taxes. The amount of income taxes finally collected for the purpose of meeting the government "payroll" would balance the amount paid out by the government to those working in non-commodity producing enterprises. A high standard of living for all workers would be maintained.

In the next article the discussion of stabilization of the price level of commodities will be continued.

TRADE COMMISSION MAY BE USED AS NRA POLICE FORCE

WASHINGTON, Oct. 13.—(AP)—Visions of the federal trade commission becoming the "police force" of NRA have been stimulated here by President Roosevelt's fight so close William E. Humphrey, old guard Republican, from membership. Previously, the commission's importance had been eclipsed, by instruments of the new deal as they sped the recovery program and for a time it was threatened with being absorbed by some other governmental department.

The president's statement that Humphrey and he did not see eye-to-eye in many things and the extreme measure he took to remove him, indicates some big role must be ahead for the commission. Mr. Roosevelt was willing to risk a court fight with Humphrey just to assure that the body reflected his own views.

It is agreed that a lot of politics will have to be done under the blue eagle—investigating cases of alleged unfair competition of code violations and infractions of the anti-trust laws.

General Hugh Johnson has said he didn't expect to have any "police-men" in his own organization if he could avoid it.

"I think such duties should be turned over to the federal trade commission as it is their job," he said.

TILLER TO TRAIL ROAD WORK OPENS

Thirty men, mostly from the Tiller district, this morning started in on road construction work on the Tiller-Trail road, following the Umpqua divide, east. It was announced today by the Rogue River National Forest office.

Money being expended for the work is from NRA funds, and is not connected with the CCC activities. Fred Warner of Tiller is in charge of the construction.

A new tractor, for use on this particular job, arrived in Medford by freight yesterday and will be moved to the point of operation.
