SILVER SCREEN REVIEW

By Mary Greiner Kelly.

It's a knock-out argument for Miss Hot-Cha to hand the older generation. And if Grandma still insists that girls didn't act that way, take her to see "The Bowery," the cinema's loudest horse-laugh on the nineties. The Twentieth Century production opened to a large and enthusiastic house at Hunts Craterian yesterday.

A regular mulligan-stew in entertainment, it contains everything from bar-room ballads to water-front free-for-alls to make Grand-pa feel at home and give Junior new fuel for the battle of the generations.

In addition to all this there is Wally Beery and Jackie Cooper, the screen's most touching pair doing some of the things they did in "The Champ"—only in a different way. There is a romantic triangle running throughout and contributing some beautiful moments, between Saloon Keeper Wally Beery, lovely Fay Wray, and Gambler George Raft. There is that funny gal, Pert Kelton, funnier than ever, as the raucous-voiced chorine of the Bowery's most popular saloon.

And in sharp contrast (pardon the pun) there is a hatchet-armed Carrie Nation doing a virtuous clean-up in a big way. So bring the family—there is something in this picture for everybody.

"Big Executive" Coming To Rialto

Ricardo Cortez, Richard Bennett, Elizabeth Young and Sharon Lynne head the featured cast of "Big Executive," exciting drama which relates the intimate secrets of a young financial wizard, coming to the Rialto theater tomorrow.

The picture is a graphic interpretation of the lives led by multimillionaires, their struggle for fame and wealth on the street supposed to be paved with gold—Wall Street. Intimate glimpses of their private lives are depicted in interesting fashion, and the action moves swiftly through skyscrapers, magnificent yachts, mountain estates, and town houses.

MUIRHEAD CEMENT PLANT MANAGER VOICES PROTEST

company live," referring to the cement plant.

At Attorney Cleland's request the commissioner withdrew his invitation to Thompson to speak. The attorney stated that the case is now in litigation, and as the cement company was talking of going into competition, he felt under the circumstances that it was rather unfair to ask Thompson to take the stand. He said counsel would fully explain the power company's side before the commission at the proper time.

Lester, who has been with the public service commission and the public utilities commission for about 14 years, told that the object of the engineering department was to make a finding as to certain duplications, and errors which crept into the final order.

Upon the request by the commission for Copco to furnish net additions from October 1913 to 1916, the company furnished gross additions, which, in figures, amounted to about $74,000 in retirements that had not been named, the engineer testified.

Two forms of gross additions were submitted to the commission by the company, he said, and actual additions on the company's books revealed that certain retirements had taken place and not reported to the commission. The gross, he said, was accepted by the commission, as net.

Engineer Lester then presented letters showing the correspondence between J. C. Thompson, then secretary for the power company at San Francisco, and the public service commission at Salem.

Additions listed by the power company between October 16, 1913 and June 30, 1914, were $14,903.59.

"The records do not show that any investigation was made and no action on the part of the commission was taken. The report, "Lester said, "included $18,000 operating property."

In connection with the water rights allowed at Klamath Falls, an amount totaling $20,000 was added twice. Such evidence came from the old working sheets of the former commission, Lester testified. The sheets bearing the corrections could not be found, he said.

Work sheets concerning the Klamath electrical division showed $20,606 on the general station and working operations, while the land was listed at $42,296.

According to divisions, the report showed: Rogue River division, $50,000; Klamath Falls, $9000 and Klamath Falls water division, $6500.

Duplications in the Rogue River division working report were charged by Lester, who gave figures for this section $1,948,493, with an additional $190,817, and $30,000 being duplicated. The listing for the valuation of the Klamath Falls division was $314,962.

Melwood W. Van Scoyoc of Portland who has been conducting the Copco investigation here for the past 8½ months in behalf of the commission, was scheduled to give minute facts in the duplications and errors at the afternoon session.

Major Willis Mahoney of Klamath Falls filed an appearance at the hearing today, and said that he would present the matters for his city at a later hearing, doing most of the work himself with the city attorney appearing from time to time.

No appearance was filed by the city of Medford, Attorney Frank P. Farrell stating that no action concerning it had been taken by the city council.
