Artists' Feud On Craterian Screen

Late last spring, the press wires started getting hot flashing the news of Al Jolson's having taken exception to Walter Winchell's account of "Broadway Through a Keyhole." Catching the dapper columnist as he wended his way down the aisles of a fight arena, Jolson swung a heavy fist that caught the unlucky Winchell smack on the nose.

"Broadway Through a Keyhole," the subject that caused a near riot that hadn't been billed as part of the fight program that night, comes to the Craterian theatre Sunday for a four days engagement. In it Winchell tells what he insists is the "inside dope" on a prominent singer and his wife. He mentions no names that are familiar but Jolson and his demure mate, the Ruby Keeler of recent musicals, believed that Winchell was taking a backhand slap at their courtship and ultimate marriage. Be that as it may, the leading roles are handled by Russ Columbo, a singer in his own right, and Constance Cummings, who portrays the part of a dancer.

To the Slim Summerville-Zasu Pitts face, "Love, Honor and Oh Baby!"—the regular feature on the Craterian program—has been added another of the Walt Disney All-Color Silly Symphonies. This one tells the story of "Old King Cole." It will be screened on all shows with the Pitts-Summerville feature.
