Craterian Brings Hill Billies For Stage Attraction

One of the most unusual stage attractions of the past decade, Glen Rice and his Beverly Hill Billies, has been booked into the Craterian theater for Sunday and Monday. On the screen, Lillian Harvey will be seen in her first American motion picture appearance—a romantic musical comedy, "My Weakness," with Lew Ayres as the leading man.

Glen Rice and the romantic mountain boys, whom he gathered from the hill regions of the continent, have created a sensation wherever they have appeared and their Brunswick records have been distributed throughout the English-speaking countries of the world.

Included in the group coming to Medford will be a 12-year-old youngster who, until a short time ago, had never been out of the OZARK country in which he was born; a cowhand whose days were spent on the ranges of Texas, until Rice brought him to the theater; a rustic comic from the hills of Missouri; a 17-year-old "gal" of the highlands, making her first theatrical tour, in a song and dance routine; Aaron, whose golden voice and tinkling guitar thrill listeners; and Zeke, a master on the accordion.

Box office records have been smashed wherever this colorful group has appeared, and it is believed that Craterian patrons will see and hear the most entertaining stage entertainment the theater has had the privilege of
