

RUM DISPENSERS BEAT REPEAL GUN HERE IS REPORT

County and city authorities were consulting law books and city ordinances today, to find out what can be done, if anything, about citizens who start selling spirituous liquors before the state of Oregon can get its liquor control law into operation.

Reports were telephoned to the district attorney and chief of police late yesterday that one or two establishments in this city had "jumped the repeal gun," and were dispensing alleged bonded liquor.

District Attorney George A. Coddling reports there is no state law that covers the situation and there is nothing the state can do about it, until the special session of the legislature does something.

The federal law requires that a revenue stamp be on each bottle, whether sold by glass, or bottle. Violation of this provision calls for two years in prison, or $5000 fine, or both.

Regulations, nation, state and city, are now making and there seems nothing much that can be done.

The legal whiskey supply in these parts is not large and what there is is expensive. Medicinal liquor, 17 years old, standard brands of yore, with age marked on the revenue stamp, sells for $3 to $3.50 per pint, too high for the average pocket-book.

There is a cheaper brand that sells for $1.75 per pint, in a brown bottle, with a label claiming the contents was distilled in Kentucky, but bearing no revenue stamp. It is called "blended whiskey," and purported to be four years old.

Members of the fire department are rebuilding and repainting the toys, and the dolls are being fixed over by the Lady Lions, who are also making attractive dresses for them.

FINE LAW POINTS EYED IN SUIT FOR REPAIR OF ANCIENT MODEL AUTO

A civil action, involving an auto, that had more value after it was wrecked and repaired than before the collision, is up before Justice of the Peace W. R. Coleman for decision, following testimony and arguments yesterday. A number of fine legal points will have to be weighed and pondered.

Lee Bechtold is suing the Crater Lake National Park company for $21.05, alleging the park stage struck the Bechtold auto on the left side, causing general and severe damage to the vehicle. The accident is said to have occurred on the Crater Lake highway on September 9, 1931, early in the afternoon.

The defense contends that the auto, a Ford of the vintage of 1926, was only worth $40, and that after the repairs had been made it "exceeded its own value." A supreme court decision holds that a vehicle is only worth what it is worth, before an accident befall, not what it is worth after repairs.

A Ford expert testified that a 1926 model T was worth between $35 and $40, and might be sold for $45, if reconditioned.

The plaintiff claimed that George Pratt, the driver of the stage, told him after the smash, to get the car fixed and charge the same to the Crater Lake Park company.

The bill of particulars listed 29 items, from a front axle to a box of tacks, as used in the repairs, and 26 hours of labor by Bechtold, himself an auto mechanic.

Gen. J. Hartman, Oregon state manager for the Occidental Life Insurance company, who was in Medford for a few days last week, announced the appointment of Earl C. Gaddis as special agent in Medford for his company. In making the announcement, Mr. Hartman stated that Earl Gaddis needs no introduction to the citizens of this community and with Mr. Gaddis' appointment, Mr. Hartman further stated that in the instance of the new family independence and savings policy, "Old Ironsides," his company has taken the greatest step forward in the annals of life insurance.

"In this new deal," says Mr. Hartman, "old sound level reserve life insurance signs its declaration of independence from the policy loan."

"Old Ironsides" sets free the life insurance policy from its entangling alliance with the cash value and makes it the servant instead of the tyrant. At last the Occidental has recognized the fact that the cash value is the policyholder's own money and policy loan interest has been swept away.
