G. PASS TO MAKE NEW FUEL FROM PRESSED SAWDUST

GRANTS PASS, Dec. 11.—(Sp.)—Heavy machinery for the manufacture of "Pre-to-logs," a new industry based on the sawdust by-product of box factories, was received in Grants Pass Friday and is being set up on foundations already prepared at the local plant of the Rogue River Box company.

Under the name "Southern Oregon Presto-log company," the local concern will manufacture the new products for exclusive distribution in Josephine, Jackson, and the southern part of Douglas counties, under license issued by Wood, Briquettes, Inc., of Lewiston, Idaho. Officers of the company are Morris Milbank, president; Niel R. Allen, secretary; H. S. Deuel and W. H. Reichstein of Medford, directors.

Buying the shavings and sawdust of the local factory, the new machinery will compress them into the Presto-to-logs which will be 4 inches in diameter, and twelve and a half inches long and will weigh approximately eight pounds each, the size proven best for commercial production and for general use in heating and cooking equipment and for ease and convenience in handling, after three years of experience and use in Idaho.

A trial run will be made before Christmas and production will start shortly after that time. The machine has a capacity of ten tons of Presto-to-logs in a 24-hour day. An additional machine will be installed when conditions warrant it. The machine is automatic, and requires one man to watch it. At the present time there are five machines in Lewiston, Idaho, six in Longview, Wash., and one in Baker.

Some of the uses for which Presto-to-logs are recommended for furnaces, heating stoves, ranges, fireplaces, bake ovens, broilers, barbecues, camping, and orchard heating. No binder is used, only pressure, so Presto-to-logs are said to be very clean to handle, with no dirt, smoke, soot, sparks, or odor.

They are "long-burning" with a steady flame, high heat value, fuel economy, and practically no ash. The material is compressed three times as dense as wood under a degree of heat that eliminates practically all moisture.

Distributors and dealers have been appointed throughout the territory. Monday, Dec. 11 will deliver grade A milk for 8¢ per qt. cash and 7¢ at the Jackson Street store. Call same for delivery. Phone 1038. Why buy Grade B. Crystal Springs Dairy.
