

HIT BOOTLEGGER BY LOW RUM TAX CHOATE'S ADVICE

$2.20 Per Gallon Mentioned as Probable Recommendation to Congress—Legal Liquor to Retailer at $1.20

WASHINGTON, Dec. 12.—(AP)—A liquor tax "somewhere between $2 and $3 a gallon" and low enough to squeeze out the bootlegger was advocated to a joint congressional committee by Joseph H. Choate, Jr., chairman of the federal alcohol administration.

He was followed by Edward G. Lowry, Jr., chairman of President Roosevelt's interdepartmental committee, who expressed the opinion whisky of rather low quality might eventually be sold for $1.50 a quart under a $2.60 a gallon federal tax. The committee had recommended a levy of this amount.

Choate did not mention a specific figure, in line with the administration's policy of leaving a decision up to congress. A $2.20 a gallon levy was frequently mentioned as probable.

President Roosevelt was represented as being more interested in driving the bootlegger out of business than in boosting the amount of liquor revenues.

Lowry explained the committee's recommendation for a $2.60 tax was based on its accompanying suggestion that the federal government of gallonage taxation, and divide the revenues with the states.

He said if this suggestion was not followed and the gallonage tax field left open to the states the federal tax should not be more than $2 or $2.20 a gallon.

He estimated revenues from a $2 tax would be $170,000,000 and from a $3 tax $218,000,000.

Might Cost Over $1.50

Questioned by Representative McCormack (D., Mass.), Lowry agreed there was some doubt in his own mind as to the possibility of selling whisky for $1.50 a quart with a tax of $2.60 a gallon.

McCormack asked if it wouldn't be better to fix the tax rate at $1.75 in order to assure elimination of the bootlegger.

Lowry agreed the committee had kept the tax as high as it could in order to raise as much revenue as possible and still permit the legal liquor industry to outsell the bootlegger and that it might have "steered too close to the line."

The witness said the committee, in considering the differences in cost between the legal and illegal sellers, had taken into consideration two factors—that the public would rather buy legal than illegal liquor and that the illegal operator must make a wider margin of profit.

Cost to Retailer $1.20

Lowry said the best evidence the committee could obtain was that legal liquor could be placed in the hands of retailers $1.20 a gallon, but that illegal spirits cost $4.20 a gallon in the retailers hands because of "protection, bribery, gunman and everything down the line."

Lowry explained the $4.20 figure was based on large scale operations but that it probably would be impossible for legal liquor to compete with the small bootlegger with a couple of bottles in his satchel. He explained that for the latter the only cost of distribution was "his shoe leather."

Representative Crowther (R., N. Y.) suggested that $170,000,000 estimated to result from a $2 tax would not make up for the revenues automatically lost when prohibition was repealed.

Revenue From Imports

Lowry said in addition to an excise tax of $170,000,000 the treasury estimated 20,000,000 gallons of importations would pay a tariff of $100,000,000 and wine revenues would amount to $30,000,000.

Lowry agreed there were many "complications" in carrying out his committee's recommendation for dividing revenues with states that refrained from levying a gallonage tax.

Representative Evans (R., Cal.) suggested the plan was "impractical" but Lowry dissented.

The defense contention is based upon the claim that the name of the foreman of the grand jury does not appear on the indictment; that sufficient time was not granted for the preparation of the defense, and exceptions are taken to the rulings of the court, and the remarks of the state attorney in his closing statements to the jury.

The defense also contends that introduction of testimony setting forth a trip to Butte Falls of Haines and the girl in the case was improper, and that new evidence has been found. It also claimed that feeling existed against Haines in the Red Top district.

Haines, in his own behalf, produced a witness to show that he was in Grants Pass with the complaining witness and another girl at the time the state holds the crime was committed.

First half of the Elks' club bridge tournament will be completed tonight at the temple, play starting at 8 o'clock. HAINES WILL SUBMIT BRIEFS IN ARGUMENT FOR ANOTHER TRIAL

It has been stipulated between counsel that arguments in the motion for a new trial of Ted Haines, Rep Top district father, now serving three years in state prison on conviction of a statutory crime involving a 15-year-old girl, will be submitted in briefs. Monday, December 11 has been set for submission of the briefs by District Attorney Geo. A. Coddling and Attorney Rawley Moore, for the defense.
