BUSINESS CENSUS GETS UNDER WAY JACKSON COUNTY

Five Enumerators Take Field — Completion Desired by February 15—Co-operation of Business Men Asked

With five enumerators in the field the American Business census got underway in Jackson county today under the leadership of Mrs. A. E. Reames, director of district No. 2 in Oregon, which includes Lane, Douglas, Coos, Curry and Josephine in addition to Jackson county.

Mrs. Reames has opened offices in the federal building on the second floor, where she is assisted by Mrs. A. B. Hinck, and as soon as the work is well organized here will continue to other sections of her territory to start the enumerations.

The five enumerators granted Jackson county are Walter E. Rowley, who has west Medford as his district; Vic H. Beckman, who is covering east Medford; Chester Putney of Ashland, who will take the census in Ashland and territory south; Mrs. Blanche D. Lyman, who has the area of western Jackson county; and C. H. Howell, eastern Jackson county, and the upper valley.

Federal Project

The census is a federal project, funds for which have been furnished by the CWA. The workers have therefore been drawn from the re-employment service rolls.

There are 29 enumerator districts in this area and 24 enumerators allowed for the section. It will therefore be necessary for the workers to double up on the project, which must be complete by February 15. Mrs. Reames stated today. The state of Oregon is divided into four districts.

The census will cover every detail and wholesale organization and most service and amusement businesses, and will furnish the first accurate measurement of the effect of the depression on these businesses. It will be extremely valuable to compare such basic data as employment, salaries and wages, total business and expenses during a year of depression with those obtaining in a year of prosperity.

Aids Employment

The census will afford temporary employment to approximately one person for every 140 business establishments in the United States. It is expected to canvass over two and a quarter million establishments.

To make it possible to complete the work in the field by February 15, and to enable business men to supply the information readily, a simple questionnaire has been prepared, of but eight questions on a single sheet.

These questions call for an accurate description of the business establishments canvassed, the kind of merchandise handled or service offered for sale, the principal functions performed, the employment given during the year 1933 to men and women on a part-time and full time basis, the salaries and wages paid to such em-employees, other operating expenses incurred, the net sales or other operating receipts of the business its stocks on hand at the last inventory date, and the amount of business done on a credit basis.

The fullest cooperation is asked of all business men, large and small, once they appreciate the value of the undertaking. It is also deemed a concrete way of contributing to a speedy and efficient business recovery to which every business man should respond unstintingly and wholeheartedly.

Thrilling Drama Coming Tomorrow Hunt's Craterian

"Fugitive Lovers," coming tomorrow to the Craterian theater, brings an entirely new kind of picture to the screen, according to advance reports. Practically all the action of the exciting story takes place on a great Greyhound bus bound west from New York city to Hollywood.

As the scenes are authentic, being "shot" from a giant road cruiser as it actually sped across the continent, the auditor, by proxy, enjoys the sensations of a cross-country trip.

As the bus with Madge Evans, Ted Healy and his "atooget," Nat Pendleton, C. Henry Gordon, Ruth Selwyn and dozens of other characters aboard, spreads past a penitentiary on its first night out of New York. Robert Montgomery, in the role of Porter, stages a daring prison break.

As the rifle and machine gun shots halt the bus, Montgomery manages to climb aboard, up to the luggage rack, where he hides under the tarpaulin. There he opens an unlocked bag, shifts into civilian clothes, and later enters the bus as a passenger.

Inside the bus a dramatic story is occurring. As Letty, a beautiful chorine, Madge Evans is attempting to escape from the gangster, "Legs" Caffee, who is riding along in an attempt to persuade Letty to return with him.

While the man-hunt for Porter is on, the daring escaped convict falls in love with Letty. Then "Legs," played by Nat Pendleton, discovers Porter's identity and conspires to aid in his capture.

The picture sweeps on with quickening tempo and a smashing climax to a tremendous finish. Richard Boleslavsky directed.

JUDGE BRAND TO HEAR PUHL CASE

Circuit Judge James T. Brand of Coos county, assigned by the state supreme court to the local bench, will be here next Thursday to hear the case of Fred Puhl against Louise Howard, for collection of money allegedly due for services in farm operation, and for money advanced.

Complaints and answers filed in the civil suit indicate that agriculture and romance mixed unhappily, and the case involves a fine point of law—obligation for debts where mutual consent exists. It is alleged that a promise to marry was made and never kept, and that the debts upon which the action is based were incurred during a four year courtship.

Puhl alleges that he performed labor and advanced money for farm machinery on promissory notes. The defendant alleges she kept house for Puhl and his son, did the cooking, and other work, and that the misunderstanding arose when the troth went awry.

A warrant was issued at the same time for the arrest of Tracy DeVinney, also charged with vagrancy, but has not been served. DeVinney is held in the city jail.

The farm is located on the Midway highway, and the debts, the complaint states, arose between September 1928 and 1931.
