

DUCK LAW ASKED BY GAME CZARS IS OPPOSED HERE

Chamber Committee Sends Formal Protest On Recommendations — None But Rich Could Enjoy Sport

Strenuous objections to the recommendations to be made by the Oregon State Game Commission to the Federal Migratory Bird Advisory board, regarding the 1934 duck season, were voiced here yesterday by the fish and game committee of the Medford Chamber of Commerce, and addressed to the Portland Oregonian, in which the recommendations were recently listed.

The season, according to the recommendations, would be from November 1 to December 31, with a daily and weekly possession limit of eight ducks. Such requirements the committee describes as "ridiculous" and worthy of little consideration from the board, stating that it is doubtful if any other state in the union, or any of the interested with life conservation organizations will support this radical policy. It would be so universally unpopular, the members add, as to cause unprecedented law violation.

"Considered from a local viewpoint, such a law would practically deprive this section of the state of any duck hunting. Practically all the duck shooting of any consequence in southern Oregon is done in Klamath and Lake counties, whose lakes and marshes have probably more than 90 per cent of all the ducks in southern Oregon. Jackson, Josephine and Douglas county duck hunters are therefore compelled to make an automobile trip of not less than 200 miles to get any duck shooting," the committee's letter sets forth.

"The Klamath and Lake county lakes and marshes freeze up some years as early as November 15, and almost always by December 1, causing ducks to migrate southward to California. The game commission would therefore give southern Oregon a two months open (?) season with possibly no more than two weeks of actual shooting, and certainly not more than a month before the ducks have left the country.

"By reason of their employment and other circumstances, many hunters are able to make only one trip from this section to Klamath county during the duck season. Adding the three dollar license fee to the necessary expense of at least a 300-mile automobile trip and a probable federal tax for the much needed duck stamp law, which it is conceded congress will pass at this season, it is not difficult to see that eight ducks will come so high to the hunter that none but the wealthy, if there are any such in this section, can afford to go duck hunting.

"Unreasonable laws like the prohibition law command no respect and get no cooperation from the general public, and if our game commission had its ear to the ground it would realize that with game law observance in Oregon probably at its lowest ebb, no unreasonable laws should be passed that will cause further violation.

"In an article in the December issue of Field and Stream, Seth Gordon, president of the American Game association, and probably the foremost authority on wild life conservation in the United States, deals with the questionable practice of further duck law restrictions, championed by some factions, as follows:

"They overlook the fact that each year, beginning with the new restrictions have been added, and that as the Migratory Bird Advisory board pointed out in July, 'progressively restricted hunting privileges have failed to perpetuate a reasonable supply of game birds.'

"We should add no more restrictions until thorough investigations by experts of the United States Biological Survey definitely determine that such restrictions will save the ducks."

"But the Oregon Game Commission leans clear over backwards in its recommendations for further restrictions, without hearing what the final recommendations will be from the Biological Survey or what federal regulations would be best for most of the country. The use of live decoys receives the commission's commendation, although practiced in every duck shooting state in the nation, and then we are finally told that the commission is not opposed to 'feeding' duck ponds, which are apparently considered a sort of light luncheon for the migrators while 'hunting' is opposed as in such abundance as to cause shooting to be profitable.

"With this much discussed wild life problem settled, the commission then proceeded to appropriate sufficient money from the practically exhausted game fund to send a delegate to Washington to present the commission's recommendations.

"It is not to be wondered that less than half of the hunters and anglers in Oregon are buying hunting and fishing licenses. You are very true."

JIU JITSU AIDS CHINA GRAPPLER

PORTLAND, Ore., Jan. 23. — (P) — Using his jiu jitsu lore, Walter Tinkit Achles, 160, Chinese grappler of Dayton, Ohio, turned Bobby Sampson's flying tackles into body presses and defeated him in last night's Labor Temple headliner here.

Sampson, 157, Los Angeles, took the first fall with a leg split, but the force of his own rushes lost him the final two falls.

His favorite Indian death hold brought Mickey McGuire, 187, Salem, straight falls from Stan Crowley, 158, Boston.

After twice refusing the bout on a foul, Jack Curtis, 159, retaliated with a right swing which flattened his opponent, "Totem Pole" Anderson, 163.

GUN CLUB NAMES SAME DIRECTORS FOR SECOND YEAR

Big Gain in Membership — Substantial Additions to Equipment Reported at Annual Meeting Members

Members of the Medford Gun club held their annual banquet and election last evening at the Hotel Medford and in compliment and recognition of the fine effort and accomplishments of the past 12 months, returned the entire board of directors to serve for the coming year. The directors will name new officers at a later meeting.

The scatter gunners thoroughly enjoyed the get-together and many exchanges of experience on field and marsh were heard as they dined.

An Active Club. President T. E. Daniels, in a brief resume of the year's activities showed that the local club is one of the most active in the state and has made great strides in the past few years despite the adverse business conditions.

In 1932 the organization had but 25 members. In 1933 the membership had grown to 51 with prospects for a like increase in the coming year. Many names on the roster have long been identified with the organization, but much new blood is coming into the club of late and some of the younger target busters are developing into fine marksmen.

Net worth of the club, including the equipment located on a portion of the city airport, was rated at $1703 in 1932 and this was shown to have increased during the past year to $1839. A great deal of improvement was made in the layout during the year, the main feature of which was a "skeet" trap costing $358. This equipment was installed under supervision of George Phytian and President Daniels took occasion to compliment Mr. Phytian on the accomplishment.

42,845 Targets Thrown. An idea of the volume of sport enjoyed at the club's traps may be gained from the fact that 42,845 clay pigeons were shot at during the past year. In 1932 the members and guests aimed at 42,555 of the mud discs.

A total of $225 was spent for purses and trophies during the year, which greatly stimulated competition among the big-bore brotherhood.

The club expects to hold a shoot here during the Diamond Jubilee, and is also angling for the Oregon state shoot in 1935.

Following the banquet and business session, motion pictures of hunting in field and duck grounds were shown by E. R. Driver.

The following directors will conduct the business of the Medford Gun club for the ensuing year: T. E. Daniels, C. W. Wood, E. W. Pearce, W. W. Bates, Sam Jennings, C. E. Eads, Ray Coleman, Sid Newton and Elmer Wilson.

"Chuck" Hoag, university of Oregon catcher who has also been prominent on a number of independent teams in the state, is a hard-hitting, hard-throwing youngster signed. He was with Eugene in the State league part of last season.

Bob Garretson, first baseman last year for Montavilla, is another Oregon-developed baseball player. McGuire has signed for a tryout.

WRESTLING CARD TO FEATURE FOUR CLEVER ATHLETES

Wrestlers, generally looked upon as the most durable of all athletes, despite the terrific punishment they undergo, are not entirely immune to injuries. Promoter Mack Lillard has recently discovered.

Dr. Nap DeVore, the French chiropractor, billed for a match with Frank Clemens here tomorrow night, has had to give up the idea, due to three broken ribs, suffered in a match in Klamath Falls. Lillard, however, has secured the services of Pete Bellacastro, belligerent Sacramento Italian, as a substitute, and Pete will be seen in action against Clemens in one-half of the double main event. Clemens hails from Oklahoma, where they turn out a rough and ready type of muscle man.

The other half of the card will feature Leo Wolfe, the Texas led with the rolling scissors, exchanging grips with Sailor Franz, tattooed tar of San Diego. Wolfe was seen in action here some time ago and made a great hit with Medford fans. His pet hold is poison for the average matman and is one of the most spectacular methods of pinning an adversary ever seen in these parts. In Sailor Franz, however, Wolfe will be apt to find the going a bit rough, as the tar is built on the general lines of a barrel and has the strength and stamina of a mule. His match here last week with Bob Meyers demonstrated the fact that the tar can outwrestle the average opponent, besides being able to make madder faces than most.

Meyers suffered an injured ear last week in his match with Franz, and according to Lillard, has had to cancel a number of matches because of the balloon-like swelling of the aural appendage. Tomorrow night's card will start at 8:15, with two sections of the Armory reserved and the balance of the seats going to the first comers.

GASOLINE WASH SETS CAMP FIRE

As the result of Jack Morris of Jacksonville attempting to wash some tar from his hands with gasoline, at the Applegate CCC camp yesterday morning, the woodbox and one wall of the barracks building where the washroom was located caught fire, according to word received at CCC district headquarters today.

Morris spilled a can of gasoline in the barracks, causing the conflagration. Officers here said this morning that camp orders forbid taking either gasoline or kerosene into the barracks buildings.

The fire was placed under control by Franklin Baum of Portland, who brought a fire extinguisher into use.
