

CWA EXTENSION UP MONDAY FOR ACTION IN HOUSE

he said, was about $70,000,000 a week. In its formal report, the appropriations committee admonished the house to remember "that these relief measures are not a permanent policy of the federal government," and added:

"They are temporary and only the extreme emergency justifies them. Relief to Many Millions

"Summarizing the direct and indirect aid furnished by the civil works program as supplemented by state and local money and the federal emergency relief administration activities, it provides relief for 7,000,000 families representing 25 to 30 million people."

The committee said it was of the opinion that the civil works fund "should be confined to state and local projects except in such cases as it may be necessary to allow funds to some federal agency to administer, supervise, inspect, etc., the execution of work on state and local projects."

The administrator testified as head of the federal relief organization that last March there were 4,560,000 families in the United States on public relief rolls representing "something over 20,000,000 people, or one person out of every six."

Relief Rolls Cut

The number of families on the federal relief rolls in December, he said, had decreased to 2,650,000.

"Suppose you reach May 1 and the number of people you have employed on your civil works rolls has increased and you find a considerable decrease on your relief rolls,"

Chairman Buchanan (D., Tex.) asked: "To stop your civil works would necessarily throw these same people back on your relief rolls?"

"That is right," Hopkins replied. "We might extend civil works a little longer. My own thought would be, however, with a fund of this size, you could not possibly keep this running all the time between now and next winter; that you would either diminish it sharply during the summer time or demobilize it entirely during the summer time. It will reach a marked decrease in numbers."

Decision Later

"We have not yet reached any administrative decision as to precisely the method that will be adopted. It will be done on a realistic basis and in the interest of the whole national economy."

Hopkins said that many people who needed relief had been ashamed to ask for it until the CWA was created last November by President Roosevelt.

In describing the situation, he said: "A strange thing happened in connection with work relief. We had been taught to believe in the study of the poor laws that the way to get people off the relief rolls is to offer them a job, because if you give them work they will duck and run, and they will not want any relief."

Fine People Apply

"Well, just the opposite happened. We found that when we started work relief many people, fine people, who could not come to us for direct relief, would come for work relief, because they said it was a job."

Speaking of charges of political interference and graft, in some cases of which prosecution has been ordered, he said, the number of persons "who have been implicated in graft is very small, although it looms very large in the public mind."

"I may have made a mistake in kicking a lot of this stuff outdoors. But, I do not like it when people, volunteers working for us, fiddle around on a project out of which they are making money through the back door."

GRAND JURY TO DELIVER REPORT

The grand jury, Thomas N. Bell, Jr., of Talent foreman, is scheduled to make its report to the court tomorrow morning. Its labors were completed late yesterday afternoon.

The grand jury has been investigating the "Dahack case" and was instructed by the court to make a report upon it. Ten days have been devoted to the hearing of witnesses and reviewing the evidence in previous grand jury investigations. Circuit Judge H. D. Norton, who has been holding court in Josephine county, will be here tomorrow to receive the report, and any indictments the grand jury may return.

Besides the Dahack matter, the grand jury investigated a dozen or so criminal matters, ranging from larceny to use threats with deadly weapons. A number of non-support cases were also heard.

The present session of the grand jury has been in session for about three weeks. The jury was first drawn about a year ago.
