What the world needs is a good Toast Definition!

When they set before you slices of a scorified substance having the molecular affinity of an Akron product, be not deceived. This is not toast.

When you contemplate within a napkin a few charred vestiges of kiln-dried bread, face the truth frankly. (Your toast credulity has been imposed upon).

Toast is not singed bread, nor seared bread, nor scorched bread. It is not dried bread, nor desiccated bread, nor dehydrated bread.

TOAST THAT IS TOAST

Toast that is toast has a crust that is "caramelized," browned to a turn, crisp, but concealing a center of moist, tender goodness. Taken into the lingual orifice it produces a beatific sensation that permeates the entire anatomy, and lets the sun shine through the darkest humors.

Such Toast is possible—but take heed—the right type of bread is a prime requisite — SUCH a BREAD IS FLUHRER'S NEW SPUN BREAD.
