Former Local Woman in Oregonian Album

Local people, who have been following the Portland Oregonian's family album, appearing in the newspaper each day, found particularly interesting last Wednesday's publication. For in it were reproduced photographs of several persons known here.

Nancy Lee, society editor of the Oregonian in 1908, who appears as a smart wearer of the "merry widow" hat, was none other than Mrs. Frank G. Owen, who later made her home in Medford, where Mr. and Mrs. James H. Owen now reside. Her husband, the late Frank G. Owen, was a nephew of Mr. Owen of this city. Their daughter was recently painted by Howard Chandler Christy as one of the outstanding beauties of the east.

DYING DESPERADO GIVES HOT TIP ON PARTNERS HIDEOUT

cape from the Crown Point, Ind., jail two weeks ago, was shot down in a battle with sheriff's officers this morning, and officers armed with machine guns were combing the vicinity for Dillinger, who, he said, had been with him.

The negro, about 35 years old, was nearly unconscious when he gasped out the information that sent all available officers into the manhunt for the desperado who had been the object of a nation-wide search since he cowed his Indiana jail guards with an imitation pistol, carved from a broom handle, and fled.

Tipped on Whereabouts

Four officers, led by Sheriff William L. Van Antwerp, went to a store in the negro section of South Port Huron, on a tip that a negro carrying a gun and boasting of a jail escape was there.

The suspect met them at the door, gave another name, and, when the officers sought to enter, opened fire. The officers returned the fire, and the suspect fell with a wound near the heart and three bullets in the abdomen.

Under Sheriff Charles Cavanaugh and Deputy Howard Lohr also fell, with serious wounds. Sheriff Van Antwerp was wounded in the arm. Deputy Ferris Lucas escaped injury in the hall of lead.

Taken to a hospital, the negro said he was the long sought fugitive, that Dillinger and three other men had been with him in South Port Huron.

When hospital attendants washed his face, they found a scar on each cheek, hidden by burnt cork. This led officers to believe that possibly Dillinger has been masquerading as a negro.

City Is Combed

Every exit from South Port Huron was placed under guard by sheriff's officers, state police and local police, and other officers combed the suburb, in search of the fugitives' hideout.

Dillinger walked out of the Crown Point jail March 3, leaving guards and deputies locked in cells. Since then, he and Youngblood have been reported in many sections of the country and at least one bank robbery is attributed to them. The search has centered for the most part in the Chicago area, where the motor car of Sheriff Lillian Holley, in which Dillinger and Youngblood had fled, was found.

Dillinger, captured in Tucson, Ariz., after a search of many months that started when he was freed from the Lima, Ohio, jail in a bloody foray by outlaw aides, faced a murder charge in Crown Point for the slaying of a policeman. That was one of many killings attributed to him during his brief career of crime which earned him the title of "cop-killer."

The local store is continuing to do good, steady business. Manager Earl Poy stated this morning. The total for yesterday was $133.55.

California Magazine Pays Roger Cowles High Tribute

(The following tribute to Roger Cowles, promising author, who committed suicide in San Francisco in January, in a fit of depression induced by continued ill health, was printed in the February issue of the Dune Forum, published at Oceanic, California. Roger Cowles spent his early youth in Medford and attended school here, later going to Santa Barbara, Calif., with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick H. Cowles. The following appreciation shows in what high regard, the literary quality of Roger Cowles work was held, by one of the leading literary groups of southern California.)

"The suicide of Roger Cowles, who had promised a contribution to the Dune Forum as soon as he could get down to the dunes and talk it over, is by far the most tragic news of this month. Even his severest critics could not but be moved by reading in the paper that this brilliant young Californian, giving up hope of ever regaining his health, had taken his life by inhaling the exhaust-gas from a hired car."

"It was not only his health, however, which caused such desperate despair—although undoubtedly his consumption had from the start warped his point of view and caused the defeatism which colored his whole life."

"His one novel, published in England, under the title of 'Distant Drums' and in this country retitled 'The San Felipeans,' was well-reviewed by all the eastern papers, not so well by the west, where pride was stung. Santa Barbara, his own home town, was particularly incensed, recognizing itself as San Felipe, and not at all flattered by the picture."

"It reminds us of the fury of the Dublin audiences when Synge's 'Play' boy of the Western World' was first presented at the Abbey theater. The rage of Caliban seeing his own image in the glass. . . Only a completely sophisticated people like the English can thoroughly enjoy being satirized to their faces (witness the immense popularity in London of Bernard Shaw.)"

"On all sides Roger Cowles was hounded by the protests of his fellow citizens. His family did not escape. Charles Hanson Towne could write in his Hearst column with delight at the brilliant characterizations, the delicious satire—but then Mr. Towne lives in New York, and saw only archetypes where Santa Barbaraans saw their friends, sometimes themselves."

"In the long run Ireland and France gained more than they lost, angry as they may have been at the moment. So it will be with California. It is only a great pity that Cowles was not strong enough to survive the indignation of his fellow citizens. He was too vulnerable to the sincere arguments of his friends. He allowed himself to be convinced that his one great gift was cruel and unethical. He destroyed the whole manuscript of his second novel. He tried to write in the vein of kindness. The next manuscript which he sent to publishers was refused. Stripped of his unique gift, he was powerless to earn a living. And California was robbed of a genius, which time would have heightened with each passing of the mortal personalities he impersonally immortalized."—Dune Forum, February 15, 1934.

PRESCOTT GIVEN FLORAL TRIBUTE

A basket of flowers was placed yesterday at the stone in the city park that stands to the memory of Constable George J. Prescott. It was the tribute of the sheriff's office to a martyred co-worker, of another day.

A year ago today, Constable George J. Prescott, was slain by L. A. Banks, during the performance of his official duty while serving a warrant upon the local agitator, indicted with a score of others for participation in the Jackson county ballot robbery. Banks was convicted of second degree murder and is now serving a life term in state prison, along with aides, convicted of ballot theft.

The murder came as a tragic climax to a long period of community turmoil in which constituted authority was defied.

In contrast to the bitterness and anxiety of a short year ago, all was peaceful in Jackson county today. Hundreds of Jackson county residents regretfully recalled the day, with the hope the tragedy, or the circumstances that bred it, would never come again.

The Percodripit makes either Drip Coffee or Percolator Coffee

Nonense? Of course it is! You can't use the same kind of maker for both. Nor should you use the same kind of coffee for both.

In a drip coffee maker, boiling water drips ONLY ONCE through a coffee specially prepared to yield its flavor QUICKLY. In a percolator, water passes many times through a coffee prepared to yield its flavor SLOWLY. The same coffee can be used for both methods, but like a "jack-of-all-trades" it is "master of none"—neither drip nor percolator. In one or the other, little things happen. It's a little weak, or a little strong, or a little cloudy, or it has a little less flavor. It's these little things that make or mar good coffee. Be sure to use the correct coffee for each method.

Your grocer has two Schilling Coffees, identical in flavor, but each is specially prepared for its purpose—each one different in blend, roast and grind.
