18-Ton Mass of Glass Cast As Scientists and Scribes Watch-Ten Months Will Be Required to Cool

CORNING N. Y., March 27 .- (UP) -In the eerie glare of a scene re- manufacturers, wholesalers and dealsembling a mad alchemiat's labora- ers subject to the privilege tax on tory, engineers Sunday poured 18 tons of white hot molten glass for the world's largest telescopic mirror. Shielding their eyes against the blinding irrideacence, 200 scientists. astronomers, research engineers, newspapermen and other special guests watched the pouring from tiers of platforms in the main building of the Cerning Glass Works. Wear Heat Shields.

Below them a score of workmen, wearing asbestos shields to protect their bodies from heat no human could stand, scurried about, guiding the transfer of the glass in huge slid-ing ladels from the melting furnace to a mold which will not be permitted to cool for 10 months.

A scientific gamble—the stakes a closer view than man has ever had of the universe about him—it will be more than three years before the great concave surface is ground and given its reflector backing. Even then the whole experiment may be a failure unless the glass emerges a failure unless the glass emerges ministion, but as yet have not been from its long process of nouring cool.

Accident Mars nore.

An accident in the pouring increased the odds against a perfect mirror in which scientists might photograph clearer pictures of the world about us than they have ever had. Several to the control of the control cores in the mold broke. After hasty consultation, engineers decided to consultation, engineers decided to continue pouring with the expectation of boring core holes when the mirror cools. This will be a prolonged difficult task with possibility of the project being ruined. The cores were designed to provide holes in the back of the mirror like which is the samell percentage of the tax has been paid, officials announced.

Super-visors gripped in their teeth shields of colored glass to protect their eyes. or colored glass to protect their eyes.
They gave orders by gesture because of the roar of gas burners. Conversation was impossible.
Spectators were unable to look into the furnaces as the doors were lifted for a few moments at a time to permit introduction of ladels. Nor could human eyes bear to look upon the white glare of the glass as it slid along overhead tracks to the mould, guided by the asbestos shielded work-Damage Viewed.

Openings were provide a in the side of the dog house through which an engineer made inspection at intervals. His warning signal when he discovered the broken cores electrified the spectators. Technical experts rushed to view the damage. After consultation they decided to continue the pouring, although they said the danger of creating flaws in grind-
