STRANG IN DRUG STORE BUSINESS HERE 50 YEARS

In the days when no decent woman used rouge or lipstick and medicines were limited to old-fashioned remedies and pills, Charles Strang opened a drug store in Medford where the Lewis Super Service is now located. That was in 1884 after the 24 year old Charles had served an apprenticeship in Walla Walla, Washington. To-tomorrow his southern Oregon customers will be offered special price reductions in celebration of his fiftieth anniversary as a druggist in the year city. This event will continue for some time.

The original Strang Drug store was a modest establishment and its owner even then made no exception to the rule that other lines of merchandise were out of place in the drug business.

Strang's store was moved to Main street in 1885 in the location now occupied by Marsh's Grocery, and the following year Miss Mary Beall, daughter of a pioneer family, became Mrs. Charles Strang.

From 1891 to 1910 Medford's first drug store was operated where the Economy Meat Market now is, and from that year on it has been located at 231 East Main street.

Bundles of prescriptions, 130,592 of them, are on display in the show windows at Strang's along with old pictures of Medford, and bottles which have been in use for 50 years. Always in a prominent position is the sign "Still a drug store."

Virgil Strang, associated with his father, has been a registered pharmacist since 1913. Three other sons, Robert, Herbert and Fred L. Strang, own the Bootery Shoe Shop next door to the drug store. Mrs. R. H. Holmes, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Strang, lives in Spokane, Washington.

His healthy tan complexion and young appearance, in spite of 73 years Mr. Strang owes more or less to golf. Five afternoons each week for a number of years, in good weather, he has walked golf balls around the Rogue Valley Golf course.

May Robson Plays In Craterian Hit

Miss May Robson, "old trouper" who recently has achieved a richly deserved popularity, offers a splendid performance in "You Can't Buy Everything," now playing at the Craterian theater. Her role is something of a reincarnation of the more notorious than famous Hetty Green of financial memory. In a living illustration of the evils that grasping wealth may bring, and an interpretation of the picture's title, Miss Robson again demonstrates her ability to make exceptional characterizations.

Miss Robson, dressed as though practically destitute, leaves her son at a hospital after an accident, as a free clinic patient, then makes her way to the bank, storms at Claude Gillingwater, its president, and with-grows all her money because Stone has become associated with the institution. Stone, it is understood, earned her undying hatred years before when he jilted her at the altar.

The son is graduated from college and she thrusts him into the bank which she dominates, virtually the wealthiest person in the country. The boy, William Bakewell, has ambitions in the direction of authorship, but they are scotched. At a house party Bakewell meets Jean Parker, Stone's daughter, and the two fall in love. Though the mother fights and storms, villifies Stone and walls at her son, the two are married. Then the old lady suddenly comes to the conclusion that money can't buy everything, even though she does succeed in ruining Stone, only to have her own son turn against her.

REESE CREEKER'S ROLL LIFTED BY GYPSIES, HE SAYS

State police here were advised today that the Klamath Falls state police are holding a man and woman, gypsies, who allegedly took W. H. Reese's billfold containing $32 when they stopped at his ranch near the Reese creek school about noon Wednesday.

The names of the couple were not known here, but the state officer investigating the case out of this office, said they belonged to the Adams band. The $32, he said, included a ditch warrant for $10.

Isbell told the officers that the band of gypsies, traveling in two cars, stopped near his place, and a woman came to his farm to buy a chicken. Isbell said he refused to sell it to her, but that she stood around and talked for some time. After she had gone, he found his billfold missing.

State police said the gypsies made the journey to Klamath Falls via Crater lake. They were apprehended in that city last night. If a settlement is not made in the case, officers said, the gypsies will be returned to Medford, probably late today.
