CANADIANS FLOCK TO NEW ELDORADO

WINNIPEG, April 7—(AP)—A gold rush, in the best traditions of the old days, but with methods and conveniences undreamed of by the sturdy '49ers, is on in western Canada.

From the tip of the Yukon to the Ontario-Manitoba boundary line mining camps teem with activity as picturesque "pick and shovel" men follow close upon disappearing snows to search and stake claims.

From Island lake, whose extreme high crosses from Manitoba into northwestern Ontario to the Mead river district of northern Alberta, gold discoveries, it is believed, may be linked up to give Canada a glacier gold mining zone, extending over 100,000 acres.

Regarded as one of the most important finds in the wide arc of exploration, the re-discovery of the lost McLeod mine, in the mysterious Nahanni country of the northwest territories, holds hope for many.

Claims have been staked for miles along the shore line of the creek, called the "back door to the Yukon." Old mining settlements in the Caribou country in British Columbia which, in the '90's, buzzed with activity and then faded into obscurity when gold gave out, are swarming with prospectors.

IDENTITY OF BIT OF BONE PUZZLE TO GOOS SHERIFF

PORTLAND, Ore., April 7—(AP)—Sheriff H. L. Hoos of Coos county was here today seeking to identify a bone which may be from a man's left arm or a bear's left hind leg.

Poul play was suspected when the bone was found in a large stove in a shack where William Bailey, 60, lived before disappearing February 9, Sheriff Hoos said.

Dr. O. Larsell of the University of Oregon medical school said the bone probably was the wrist end of a left radius bone, probably from a human being. Dr. Larsell said some abnormal markings on the bone might have resulted from an old injury.

Sheriff Hoos was looking for Bailey's sons, Maynard and Shirley, who formerly lived here. Relatives might have knowledge of some injury to Bailey's arm which might lead to identification.

"The only other possibility that we know of is that the bone came from the left hind leg of a bear," the sheriff said.

And even as the two views were enunciated today, new plans were formulated for hastening the recovery procedure. Details of the home building, stum clearance and subsistence homestead plan, long contemplated, were taking shape under Frank Walker of the national emergency council.

The Chamber of Commerce tempered its enthusiasm at the pace of recovery by saying numerous legislative proposals, pending and already enacted, were slowing down the business pick-up. It listed the securities act, the stock exchange regulation bill and the Wagner labor board bill as hindrances.

Katharine HEPBURN

Acclaimed the screen's greatest actress. Winner of film-dom's highest honor... the award of the Motion Picture Arts and Sciences.

TRIGGER... Spitfire of her native hills—part mystic, part earthy... gloriously alive and free and human... a law unto herself with all the abandon of soul that whips her from angelic piety to malevolent fury... She's poison... prayer... and passion... She's charm... danger... and love... A thousand moods dance like flames in her wild heart... Hepburn is superb as Trigger!
