

LAST ARGUMENTS IN MURDER CASE SET FOR MORNING

scribed to the jury how he was seated when Horan entered his office the evening of February 12. He showed how he himself leaped behind his own desk for protection, obtained the second gun and returned the legislator's fire.

First Shot Dropped
His own first shot, he declared, dropped Horan into a chair. Horan fell forward to the floor with the second.

Manning said he fired at random from a position on the floor. Horan's shots struck a chair and a bookcase.

Attorneys for both the state and defense conducted arguments in the privacy of the judge's chamber relative to state questions seeking to determine the clearness of Manning's recollection on the Saturday and Sunday before the shooting.

George Roberts, Manning's counsel, was upheld in the contention it was immaterial to the case.

Manning told the state this morning that he wrote with his left hand but could shoot with either. He said he held his weapon in his right hand when he fired at Horan.

Horan Right Handed
Horan, whom the state said was right handed but whose the defense said was almost equally proficient with his left, was found with a gun clutched in his left hand.

Manning was noticeably indefinite in his replies to state questioning. He said the excitement of the events and the horror of the tragedy completely upset him.

He said it was impossible for him to state accurately distances of objects in the office at the time of the homicide or his own positions and those of Horan.

KLAMATH FALLS, Ore., April 25.—A quarrel and fatal gun battle in his office February 12 was described to the jury late yesterday by Horace M. Manning who is charged with first degree murder of State Representative Ralph W. Horan.

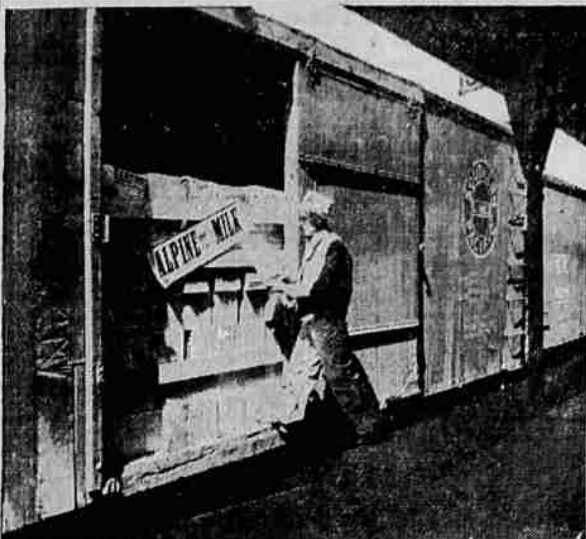

"You're paying entirely too much attention to my personal affairs and you're telling lies about me," Manning said Horan shouted at him. Manning said he had counseled Horan to be more temperate for the sake of his wife who was in poor health.

Manning said he prepared to leave the office to end the climactic argument in which Horan accused him of circulating stories about him and calling him a crook. But as he started to leave he saw Horan grab a revolver from the desk beside which he had been seated.

As Horan backed away Manning grabbed the other revolver from the drawer, stooped behind the desk and then raised his hand and took a blind shot after Horan had shot twice, he related. The shot accidentally knocked Horan backward into the chair opposite Manning's desk and the latter raised and fired a second shot.

Horan toppled to the floor, kicked convulsively, gasped and then was silent, Manning said.

Medford Boxes for Alpine Milk

A beautiful exhibit is on display in the window of the chamber of commerce this week by the makers of Alpine Milk. In connection with the display, some interesting information was divulged today by the Timber Products company. The manufacturer of Alpine Milk have, during the past eight years, spent over $300,000 in Medford for box shooks. It is pointed out by officers of the Timber Products company that this is equivalent to 3,600,000 boxes which is equal to 8 train loads of 50 cars each. By making their purchases at the local box factory, the makers of Alpine Milk have contributed a great deal towards the industrial development of this city, as the huge purchases which have been made during the past eight years have been responsible for the employment of a large number of men. It was pointed out by chamber of commerce officials that this information is particularly appropriate this week, during the state-wide celebration of "Oregon Products Days," and it is believed that Medford citizens will be extremely surprised to learn that one firm alone has spent such a huge sum with the local box factory.

Citizens are invited to inspect the window which is attractively arranged.

LAYMAN DRAFTS DIVORCE PAPERS

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., (UP)—Reluctance to pay for legal talent to handle intricate court details, did not restrain Lewis L. Heidt, a clerk, from filing a divorce complaint. He took the matter into his own hands. Heidt bought some official looking paper, borrowed a law book from a public library, studied the method and drew up his own complaint. Cecil Echemeyer, court file clerk, who spends most of his time helping attorneys draw up divorce complaints, accepted Heidt's handiwork as the first complaint ever filed in the county by a layman and termed the document "a model piece of work."

The variety was not known at the chamber of commerce, but the cherries are a very dark red in coloring and of medium size.
