HE WAS 'HOST' TO DESPERADO

Emil Wanatka (hatless, right foreground), proprietor of the Little Bohemia resort near Mercer, Wis., is shown telling newspapermen how John Dillinger and a band of gangsters held him and his guests virtual prisoners for three days. "Why should I try to take him?" Wanatka asked. "I played cards with him every day. He had a roll of money big enough to choke a cow." (Associated Press Photo)

Curious Present
It was a new Chicago that met an older Insull in the ghostly morning light of the union depot.

Missing were the handclasp of friends high in financial and business and social circles.

The crowds were there, to be sure. Thousands spilled across the concourse, held back from the train shed by the police. But there was no demonstration either of welcome or resentment, merely curiosity.

Brilliant flares and popping flashlight bulbs lent a holiday semblance to the scene.

JOHN MATHIUS MAST, LONG A RESIDENT OF SO. OREGON, PASSES

John Mathius Mast passed away at the family residence, R. F. D. 4, Medford, Tuesday at 9 a. m., after an illness of the past 10 days. He had resided in southern Oregon for the past 35 years, and at his last residence for 28 years continuously.

Mr. Mast was born in Illinois, March 24, 1869, and when a child of three years, moved with his parents to Chillicothe, Mo., where he attended public school and grew to young manhood. When 30 years of age he came to Oregon, and met and was united in marriage to Lorence Fisher at Jacksonville, Ore., June 4, 1908.

Insull, to whom thousands were patty, sagged in his chair. Thompson pleaded again, but the court had decided.

"That is my best judgment," Judge Barnes concluded, and, rising, withdrew into his chambers.

Deputy marshals assisted the broken man to his feet, marched off with him to the office of U. S. Marshal H. C. K. Laubenhelmer, where only an hour before Insull had been delivered into his custody by Burton Y. Berry, the president's messenger, who had brought him from Istanbul.

"What can we do?" cried Samuel Insull, Jr., as he accompanied his father from the court room.

"Father will have to submit to incarceration," he said. "We cannot make the bond."

A physician and old friend, Dr. Arthur Elliott, joined them in the marshal's office.

Resigned to jail
"I am resigned to jail," the elder Insull was quoted by his son.

Marshal Laubenhelmer said it was likely Insull would be removed to the Cook county jail, where the county houses about 1000 prisoners for the government for 25 cents a day.

The bond assessed against the stricken monarch, once one of America's wealthiest men, was four times that of his younger brother, Martin, and four times that furnished by Al Capone, the gang lord, tried and convicted by Prosecutor Dwight Green.

Martin Insull, brought home a prisoner after two years in fighting extradition from Canada, was missing from the homecoming scene of his brother today. Facing only the state charges of larceny and embezzlement, since he was extradited solely on these indictments, Martin spent a single night in the county jail a month ago and then gave $50,000 bond, going to the rural home of his son-in-law, Major William Rafferty, at Morocco, Ind.

Only briefly did smiles light up the face of the aged defendant today.

Wife Sends Message
Once he brightened when a messenger handed him a cablegram from Mrs. Gladys Insull, his wife, now at Athens, whence he slipped away to board a chartered Greek tramp steamer, the Melotis.

"Thinking of you on arrival Great Love, Gladys," it read. Insull handed it to his son, happy for a moment.

There was a flicker of amusement in the court room, when District Attorney Green in his statement referred to Insull's blackening his mustache and otherwise disgusting himself to walk unnoticed from his Athens hotel to go aboard ship at Pirraea, Port of Athens.

Attorney Thompson said he might appeal the fixing of bond to the U. S. circuit court of appeals.

"But we may let him go out to the county jail," Thompson said. "We are not asking for mercy. They can send him to the rock pile if they want to."

NOT TRUE BILL FOUND IN CLAIM OF TAX EVASION

dents claimed he incurred losses in 1931 on the sale of stock of the Pittsburgh Coal company and on a sale of stock of the Western Public Service company, a capital loss of $5,672,189.95 and an ordinary loss of $5,769.30 was claimed in the coal company transaction and a capital loss of $352,500 and an ordinary loss of $49,500 in the Service company stock sale.

Capital losses are taken on stock held more than two years and ordinary losses on stock held less than two years.

Shortly after 10 a. m., the grand jury of 21 members filed into the court room. Yesterday they had scanned evidence in the case and heard witnesses for five hours.

Federal Judge R. H. Gibson took his seat.

"Gentlemen, have you any documents?" he asked.

The foreman, William Beeson, a bank clerk of about 45 years of age, indicated with an affirmative nod, holding up a portfolio.

A court attendant took the papers and handed them to the judge.

Not True Bill
The document which the judge held in his hands was marked "not a true bill." It contained the government's charges of tax evasion.

Judge Gibson turned the papers over to a clerk with an order that they be filed. He then faced the jurors again and instructed them to resume their deliberations on other cases.

Under the usual procedure the grand jury, in failing to indict, made no statement.

It merely returned a document containing the government's charge after writing across it the words, "not a true bill."

Announcement that the charges would be filed against the banker was made by Attorney General Homer S. Cummings in Washington on March 10, and the jury's deliberations got under way yesterday. Only five witnesses were heard, three of them government accountants and tax experts and the other two officials of Mellon banks.

In a statement last Friday Mellon said he really had "overpaid" rather than underpaid and that he would seek a refund.

He charged his affairs were being "railroaded" to the grand jury in an attempt to discredit former administrations in which he participated.

Two children were born to this union, one daughter, Miss Della Mast, and one son, Fred Mast, both at home. His widow, Mrs. Florence Mast, also survives. Mr. Mast was a kindly friend and neighbor, and leaves many friends to mourn his passing. He was a member of Phoenix Lodge, Woodmen of the World. He leaves three sisters and four brothers, all in the east.

Funeral services will be conducted from the Perl Funeral Home Thursday morning at 11 o'clock, with Rev. D. E. Millard officiating; Phoenix Woodmen of the World lodge in charge. Interment will take place in the Phoenix cemetery.

Approximately 25 Lane county families may be placed upon "subsistence" homesteads soon, according to O. E. Crowe, commissioner from Lane county, who spoke before the conference of social work here today.

The plan is designed primarily for Lane county, it was explained, but would apply to other western Oregon counties as well.

Crowe said 250 acres of land, apporportioning 10 acres to each family under the two-year leases and giving the holders option to buy on a long-term payment plan, would be obtained under the system.

government, he related, had spent a vast sum chasing this elderly gentleman around the hemisphere and wanted assurance he would be on hand for trial.

Heavy Bond Proposed
"This means he will be compelled to go to jail," protested Floyd E. Thompson, former chief justice of the Illinois supreme court, defender of Insull.

"If the government thinks we are bluffing, the government will find it is mistaken. We cannot raise this amount."

"When John Factor was held for removal to England recently, the government only placed him under $50,000 bond."

Federal Judge John P. Barnes listened briefly to the arguments.

"The only question before the court," the jurist said, "is the amount of bail which would reasonably assure the presence of this defendant at his trial."

"The question as to how much money or property a man has, has nothing to do with the amount of bail. Under the circumstances I am of the opinion that the suggestion of the government is not excessive."

Court Admitted
Insull, to whom thousands were patty, sagged in his chair. Thompson pleaded again, but the court had decided.

"That is my best judgment," Judge Barnes concluded, and, rising, withdrew into his chambers.
