At Studio Today

Ann Harding and her playmate, Delmar Watson, who appear in "The Right to Romance" at the Studio theater today, with Robert Young, Nils Asther and Sari Maritza. It is a romantic drama of the love experiences of a lady beauty doctor.

Three men at Warrenton, N. C., have engaged in their own private poker games regularly since 1866.

Joe Brown in New Rialto Film

This is one time when Brown feels blue. It's one of the many side-splitting scenes in "A Very Honorable Guy" starring Joe Brown in the Rialto theater today and Monday. This particular moment shows Joe having his head measured after selling his skull for $1000, with a promise to deliver the body at a designated time. As a gangster whose word is as good as his bond, Joe finds himself getting into one tight situation after another. All of which prove to be added enjoyment for the audience.

Clark Gable in Craterian Show

Amidst the nation-wide publicity attendant to the awarding of the Pulitzer prize, the Craterian theater shows the screen version of the play which was accorded the honor of receiving the prize for the outstanding play of the year, "Men in White," for a two-day engagement, today and Monday only. Clark Gable is starred.

"Men in White" has the dramatic background of a modern hospital, vivid and gripping in the gamut of emotions, which only a hospital knows. It shows the extent to which the doctor or surgeon must give the idea of social life where he can go out whenever he pleases or make appointments a few days ahead. His social life always comes second if medicine means enough to him.

"Lady for a Day" Opening at Roxy

"Lady for a Day," which opens today at the Roxy theater, is destined for a prominent niche in screen drama's Hall of Fame. It possesses that indefinable quality that distinguishes greatness. It has tremendous universal appeal—a charming, fairy story that strums on the heart-strings of the entire world. Hard-boiled men and tender hearted women, sweet young debs and sophisticated flappers, impatient youngsters and sleepy-eyed elders laugh and cry and thrill alike to the touching, pathetic story.

her wares to support a daughter in Europe. Pretending to her daughter that she is a society matron, Annie gets into difficulties when her daughter writes that she will visit America with her fiancé and his father, a Spanish count, who intends to check up on the family pedigree. Dave the Dude (Warren Williams), a big shot gambler who considers Annie his lucky charm, comes to the rescue. He installs her in a wealthy playboy friend's apartment, dresses her up in true grand dame style and provides a temporary husband in the party "Guy Kibbee, who portrays a glib penny ante pool shark.

The description almost proves a bust when the police hold Dave and his pack of hoodlums from abducting three society reporters on the eve of an elaborate reception planned as a farewell party to the count and his son.
