

GIRL'S ABDUCTORS REVEAL HIDEOUT WHEN NERVE FAILS

a trench that soon might have become her grave.

Letter Gives Clue

Apparently unwilling to negotiate with her parents for $10,000 in ransom money awaiting them, the kidnappers or their agents mailed from Chicago to the office of Gov. B. B. Meaurio in Phoenix a letter which gave detailed instructions where the girl might be found.

It was this letter, speeded to Tucson yesterday by Sergeant Riley W. Bryan of the Arizona highway patrol, that sent Pima County Attorney Clarence Houston and his assistant, Carlos Robles, June's uncle, in a frantic dash to a spot nine and one-half miles southeast of here where the dark-eyed little girl was found.

There in a trench six feet long, two and a half feet wide and three feet deep that had been scooped out of the ground and surrounded by clumps of cactus and mesquite bush, Houston found the girl, chained by her ankles to a stake.

Victim Skeptical

Alert, though seemingly dazed by her experience, June at first was skeptical of Houston as he approached.

"Are you dead, honey?" he called. "Hello," a weak voice answered. "Do you know me, honey?" Houston asked.

"No," June replied, gazing at him squarely and making no effort to help him release her bonds.

"Do you know 'Hech'?" Houston asked, using June's nickname for her Uncle Carlos, who was rapidly approaching.

"Oh, yes," she cried, scrambling to get free.

Nearly, Houston found a piece of tin on which lay the key fitting padlocks on June's ankles. He tossed it to her and she freed herself to be pulled by willing arms from her grave-like prison.

Everything was found as indicated in the Chicago letter, a letter which probably wouldn't have been written, authorities said, if the kidnappers had dared negotiate for the ransom.

Feared to Claim Ransom

But in many days of official withdrawal from the case, there was no word to indicate the abductors were ready to claim their demand. A second ransom note, received by the family last week, only reiterated an official demand for money as the price of June's freedom, the family insisted.

Hazily, as Houston and Carlos Robles drove her to the home of her grandfather, June told them how she had been imprisoned in the desert since the day she was seized. Authorities indicated other evidence corroborated this story.

She said two men who called each other "Bill" and "Will" had visited her only twice during the 19 days and once took away the pillow and mattress which had been her only comfort during the imprisonment.

Houston said the trench contained a can of water, a loaf of fairly fresh bread and some wilted vegetables and oranges apparently left for the girl.

Chain Leaves Scars

Her ankles scarred by the cruel chain, June was too weak to walk without aid, although she tried gamely, and finally Houston and her uncle allowed her to go through the motions of walking as they supported her en route to their automobile.

On her arrival at the home of her grandfather, Bernabe Robles, where the prostrated mother clasped her tearfully, June asked for her "bunnies" and sat on the floor to cut paper dolls before she could be persuaded to undress for bathing and the needed rest she lacked.

The letter from Chicago, armalmed and unsigned, was in the handwriting of the person who sent a demand for $10,000 ransom to Fernando Robles, June's father, two hours after she was kidnapped, authorities said.

So ended the mystery of June's whereabouts, a mystery that at times had sent hundreds of cowboys, ranchers, war veterans and picturesque Mexican searchers in frantic hunts over the far-flung desert country in always vain efforts to find the little girl.

Soothaying politicians here figure that Pinchot will defeat Reed in the Pennsylvania primary, but have their doubts about Pinchot's ability to defeat the Democrat, Joe Guffey, in the fall.

The White House still insists it is taking no part in the primaries, but it went to the extent of having Pinchot as an overnight guest recently. The insiders say it was not because Mr. Roosevelt likes Pinchot more, but Reed less. The Democrat, Guffey, will probably sleep in the White House before the November election.

Gleemen, Guest Artists Please Large Audience

(By Irva Fewell)

The program cut short by the illness of Miss Frances Mullen, guest pianist, disappointed the large audience at the Gleemen's spring concert last evening at the high school, but it did not dampen the enthusiasm for Miss Dorothy Wagner's dancing nor the two group numbers by the Gleemen, under the direction of James Stevens, with Sebastian Apollo, assistant director, at the piano.

The Gleemen's first group of numbers was so well received that "Jim" Stevens, smiling appreciatively, brought the chorus back to sing "Deep River" as the encore.

Her technique faultless, Miss Mullen gave a fine rendition of Chopin's Etude Opus 10:12. Beautiful, shading of tone, and artful touch, were combined to give a wonderful interpretation to Pastoral Variet, by Mozart, Miss Mullen's second number.

With Miss Mullen unable to continue with her part of the program, the Gleemen returned to their second group of songs. George Peckham's incidental solo in the selection from Robin Hood was applauded until he repeated the bass solo.

Mr. Apollo was required to take a bow for his arrangement of Wagon Wheels, which the Gleemen sang twice as their final number.

Completely harmonious were the interpretative dance numbers as portrayed by the beautiful Miss Wagner, whose ease and grace seemed to be an expression of enjoyment. Applause was overwhelming when she appeared in the Portuguese Peasant Dance for her winsome bashfulness was an ideal representation.

The Baldwin concert grand was furnished through courtesy of the Baldwin Piano shoppe, and floral decorations wrote by Medford Flower shop.
