From the above figures, it can be seen that though many schools will be closed no matter who is elected Governor in the fall, he will be a good-looking man, about 60 years old.

The people did not understand the Sales Tax so defeated it. It is modeled on the same principle as the Gasoline Tax—pay as you get.

The forces that defeated the Sales Tax will now be for the schools. They were not until a political victory had been scored.

It takes about two years for the average Oregonian to get wise to political skulduggery. Until then the schools will have to skimp along on shortened finances.

TWAS EVER THUS (Pendleton East Oregonian)
There are 34,000 people claiming benefits under the provisions of an act for pensioning the widows of soldiers and widows of the war of 1812.

Ladies of the Sams Valley Extension unit will hold a meeting at the school house Friday, conducted by Mrs. Mabel Mack.

Recent visitors at the O. R. Treaham home included Mr. and Mrs. B. F. Ensley of Salem; Mrs. Carl Wallace of Hawaii, and Mrs. W. H. Treaham of Kerby.

LOE ANGELES, May 22.—(AP)—Among this morning's advertisements: "People just won't repent, no must sell my gospel tent. $95 or what?"

Welcome to the P. E. O.

BEFORE the delegates to the state P. E. O. convention, now meeting in this city, fold their tents and steal away, we would like to welcome them and express our appreciation of their efforts to extend the benefits of education, to deserving young women of this country.

Because of the primary election, and the intensity of political interest over the week-end, the opening of this gathering was scarcely noticed, until the first day's session had been held. In marked contrast to other conventions there was no fanfare of publicity trumpets, before the convention opened; no shower of advance notices as is customary descended upon the local press.

It seems the P. E. O. is not addicted to self-advertising. It is devoted to work—useful, constructive work,—the advance of education and the spreading of cultural benefits in this land of ours.

The members wear no uniforms, stage no parades, support no bands, they tend strictly to business, and as far as the press is concerned are interested only in the facts.

Might we add this is a refreshing change from the practices of many of the masculine "play orders", that devote their convention energies largely to having a good time, while serious business goes by the board.

NOTHING is more needed in this country than more education of the RIGHT kind, and particularly among those who earnestly desire it, but because of financial conditions are unable to obtain it. So often those who don't particularly desire it,—and, therefore, make no good use of it,—are sent through college merely because it's the thing to do.

The P. E. O. sisterhood confines its attention to those young ladies who have a serious purpose in life, who have started their education but through no fault of their own, have been unable to finish it, and therefore, if given financial aid, can be depended upon to render a good account of themselves.

That this principle is sound, and the confidence thus imposed, is seldom misplaced is attested to by the fact that in twenty-seven years this organization has built up a fund of nearly $1,000,000, and up to the year 1931, only $1400 had been lost through bad loans.

Certainly an admirable record! And one of the chief reasons for this success, undoubtedly has been the refusal of the order to meddle in politics, or allow politicians to meddle with it,—a practice so fatal to most organizations of this kind.

The Mail Tribune is certainly delighted to have such a gathering of women meet in this city, and trusts that the present convention will be so successful, that before many years pass, the members will be disposed to meet here again.

An Amazing Victory

THE complete vote on the state sales tax in Jackson county is even more extraordinary than last Saturday's tabulation indicated. From the first, there was no doubt of the victory, but that the vote for the measure would be more than twice that against, certainly surpassed the expectations of even its most ardent supporters.

The most common prediction before the primary, was that the sales tax would pass by 1000 votes. According to the complete but unofficial tabulation it passed by 2320 votes! Certainly a great victory, and in the only county to pass the tax in the entire state.

Since then, the Mail Tribune has been the recipient of many congratulations, verbal and written, and the same are greatly appreciated. But as before stated in this column, were this section of the state, NOT as progressive, enlightened and public spirited, as it is, no such result would have been possible. This isn't "modesty." It's the plain TRUTH.

AND there is another thing which we neglected to call attention to in our Sunday comment. Thanks to E. H. Hedrick, superintendent of Medford schools; C. R. Bowman, county superintendent of schools, and members of the Parents and Teachers associations, Jackson county had the most effective and best organized sales tax organization in the entire state.

Although seriously ill Mr. Hedrick refused to quit, and during the closing days of the campaign, did valiant work in directing the campaign, and giving the workers constructive and useful ideas. In this direction he was ably assisted by Principal Glenn Smith of the Medford high school. Superintendent Bowman was on the job all the time, and so were the ladies of the Parent-Teachers associations,—and how!

It takes more than one organization to win a victory like this. It was the COMBINATION of many in Jackson county, working on a type of citizenship that all in all is the highest in the state, that did the trick.

cinet, but Northwest, where the vote was a 39-30 tie. In the rural precincts sentiment was evenly divided. Derby registered the heaviest vote against it, with a 24 and a lone yes.

WHY HAVE PNEUMONIA?
In the present state of medical thought no one can tell what the consensus of medical opinion may be about pneumonia. The views of physicians as to the nature, cause and treatment of pneumonia have changed and are changing. I offer here merely my own beliefs about it. So you wisecracks may as well stop now, for I'm only a doctor and a treatment of pneumonia would naturally would not know as much as a layman about such things.

As it seems to me, then, the idea that cold, dampness, exposure, chilling and the like predispose to the development of pneumonia or in any way contribute to such illness is rapidly fading, and the infectious factor is gaining in importance in sanitation and medicine.

While pneumonia, seriously called lobar pneumonia, pneumo-pneumonia and (in time past) lung fever, is a specific infection with the germ known as the Pneumococcus, from our present knowledge it is probable that some contributing cause or causes operate besides the accident of infection. NOT such speculative causes as cold or wet—scientific experimentation fails to support that quaint fancy.

Recent scientific investigation indicates that in many instances of pneumonia collapse (doctors call this atelectasis) of a portion of lung fed by one bronchus occurs and then inflammation develops in the collapsed lobe. This collapse or atelectasis is liable to happen in cases of submersion, during anesthesia, suffocation, from temporary plugging of a bronchial tube by mucus or foreign body, and perhaps in other circumstances which we do not yet clearly understand.

Both as preventive and curative treatment, administration of 7 per cent carbon dioxide with oxygen by inhalation, has proved effective against this collapse-pneumonia. The carbon dioxide is the natural stimulus to breathing and makes even the unconscious individual breathe deeply and vigorously.

More of my own opinion—maybe I'm quite crazy, but anyway I'm honest with you; I believe the regular practice of Belly Breathing, at least each night when one hits the hay, and again each morning when one awakens, tends to prevent pneumonia. There is only one little catch in this—the booklet, "The Art of Easy Breathing," which gives detailed instructions for Belly Breathing, comes to you on receipt of a dime and a stamped envelope bearing your address.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS
Child Eats Laundry Starch. My sister-in-law lets her 20-month old baby have a box of glass starch and eat as much as she cares to eat of it. I told her it isn't good for the baby, as most people keep all starchy foods away from children... Mrs. P. F. S.

Answer—Starch is wholesome food for anyone, but it is unwise to allow anyone to gorge on any one food like that, no matter whether it is starch, sugar, candy, bread, eggs, meat, or cereal, to the exclusion of other desirable foods. If the child prefers her carbohydrate ration in the form of laundry starch it is quite all right to let her have it in that form. I should advise plain laundry starch or corn starch rather than gloss starch. Males.

Daughter, age seven years, has a number of small moles under her mouth, none larger than the head of a match... Mrs. D. G. C.
Answer—Your physician can obliterate them with diathermy or with electrolysis or with carbon dioxide. If he does not give such treatment he will refer you to the nearest physician who does.

Love interest for the ranch day was provided by Francis Lederer, Hollywood's newest imported Romeo, who dropped in while scouting for a hideout to rent during his stay. Hand-kissed comes as natural to this exquisite as the American hand-shake. I saw him long before his American debut in the Berlin production of "The Wonder Bar." Theda Bara phoned she was motoring over, but we had to go before she arrived.

There was a grocery store opening (the only phone in the community is there) down at the village last night. Cowboys and cowgirls, booted and spurred, rode in from neighboring ranches to dance and enjoy a free treat. Boarding school daughters of ranch owners waited with the gauchoes and sturdy young blacksmiths. Everything ran clean, like the surrounding rivers and hills. The almost lost national mood called "pauity" was ardently recaptured. A gaily little predictor of world doom from the Madison Square soap box would have looked a bit silly in this crowd.

The Rothacker collection of dogs, of course, instantly won my affection. In all—two spotted coach dogs, a Cairn, shy dachshund and cocker spaniel. The Cairn and a coach came to snarling grips once in the center of the big living room. Out waddied Peter, the old established cocker, nester himself between them as much as to say, "Not before company, you mutts; Beat it!" And they slunk away.

And, dogs remind me, that if for nothing else I shall always think of Los Angeles with a rosy glow for this. Lying in front of a smart dog shop window in the Wilshire district, a slightly crooked gentleman wandered up. Opening a slit in the door, he called: "Selling your betters, eh?" and teetered off, bless him!

The Rothackers' lovely daughter, Virginia, took me down to the white stables to see their riding horses, which galloped hopefully across the corral to the fence for carrots. A young cavalier doeked Virginia and me against the background of a tows of barnyard hay. Rothacker suggested a caption: "The Farmer's Daughter and the Traveling Salesman."

Comment on the Day's News

By FRANK JENKINS.
LITTLE JUNE ROBLES, aged six, is kidnaped, taken out into the hot desert, chained, like an animal, to a cage that is sunk in the ground, and abandoned when her frightened abductors decide that further attempts to collect the ransom are too dangerous.

What should be done to men who do things like that?
THIS WRITER can't answer that question, and you can't—at least, you can't answer it sanely and intelligently, as a civilized being should. If we try to answer it, we merely find ourselves in the grip of the primitive, red-eyed urge of the jungle; all we can think of to say is that they should be treated like the beasts they are and killed without mercy.

BT KILLING, mercilessly, these bruter who kidnaped and abandoned little June Robles wouldn't undo the harm that has been done to June or soothe the suffering that was caused to her parents. What we NEED to do is to devise ways of catching and punishing such criminals that will be SURE and CERTAIN, so that others that are tempted to profit by kidnaping and torturing children will be turned back from their foul designs.

The purpose of punishment of criminals is PREVENTION OF CRIME, and if we are to prevent crime we must make punishment certain. CERTAINTY of punishment is a much greater preventive of crime than severity of punishment—although, of course, no punishment could be too severe for brutes, such as the kidnapers of little June.

ALONG that line, a Washington dispatch says:
"Attorney-General Cummings today pledged the facilities of the department of justice for PROSECUTING persons responsible for the kidnaping of June Robles and William F. Gettle."

Fine, Mr. Cummings. We're all with you on that, of course. But we mustn't forget that before criminals can be prosecuted they must be CAUGHT. The old recipe for rabbit soup, you know, begins thus: "First catch your rabbit."

IF THE department of justice, and all the other agencies of the federal government, can't catch John Dillinger, whose identity is known, how can it hope to catch a lot of unknown kidnapers?

PETRIFIED TREES NEAR BEND ONCE GIANT REDWOODS
BEND, Ore., May 22.—(AP)—Petritied and opalized fragments of giant redwoods which flourished in central Oregon's rain belt forests millions of years ago, were examined yesterday by members of the Oregon Agate and Mineral society of Portland, on their annual outing to the Pony Buttes district in Jefferson county.

The Portland group, headed by Dr. H. C. Duke, president of the society, were joined on the expedition into the rugged region immediately west of deeply carved Trout creek gorge by members of the newly organized Bend Geology club.

The first stop was at Polka Dot mine where, old-timers say, Indians obtained chalcodony for arrow points, using fire to break chunks of the hard material from overhanging ledges.

After visiting the petrified forest, the amateur geologists collected nozules, many of which held prized agates. In the petrified forest were found huge slabs of trees said to be remnants of Sequoias of primeval Oregon's rain belt forest. Some of the trees, mineralized pieces of which are scattered over the now semi-arid region, were 30 feet in diameter, geologists estimate.

Lewis H. Irving of Madras, owner of an exceptionally large collection of petrified woods, agates and opals, was the guide on the field trip.

A. C. Howlett of Eagle Point, writer of the Eagle Point "Eagle" in the Mail Tribune, and a widely known southern Oregon pioneer, passes at the age of 92 years. Local fishermen claim all the fish are caught on the lower Rogue, causing unbelievable loss to upper river sport.

City decides to enforce parking ordinance, despite the objections of merchants. County court rejects "plea of seven transient autoists for gas, food and money."

THUNDER showers break over the valley, and moderates the heat. "Smokeless frying" to be demonstrated at Mail Tribune cooking school.

"Sunday baseball" is declared "America's greatest menace" by the Presbyterian church committee on observance. Complaints received that "autoists deliberately took their horns to scare farmers' horses and teams."

Bids to be advertised for erection of postoffice building here.

Thatcher said he had long been a sufferer from lumbago, but finally got rid of it by catching smallpox. Van Nuy indicated he would keep the lumbago.

The political crowd here was surprised that the report of the Carnegie Foundation commission of college professors caused no more commotion than it did. The report heralded the passing of the age of individualism and advocated collectivism.

The democrats all contend they carried Pennsylvania and Delaware in the 1932 presidential elections. They say that, if the national result had been close, they had enough data to force a recount, which would have won those two states from Mr. Hoover.
