

FARM, INDUSTRIAL PARADE ACCENTS RESOURCES HERE

parted in the costumes of their organizations also took part.

There were many fine floats entered by the Granges of Jackson county. Officers of the Pomona, dressed in white uniforms headed the march. The Bellevue Grange entered a flower-bedecked airplane with a chorus of men and women within. Lakeview Grange entered a float with little boys and girls, doing farm duties, and the Roxy Ann Grange, had among its offerings an auto packed with children, and captioned: "This is our most profitable crop." The Friendly Neighbors of Beagle, the Central Point Grange, the Jacksonville Grange, the Enterprise Grange, the Phoenix Grange, the Live Oak Grange, the Applegate Grange, the Eagle Point Grange, and others also paraded.

Many of the floats were decorated with wheat from this year's crop—all long and full-headed—in contrast to the drought parched acres of the middle west.

An estimated crowd of 10,000 people, chiefly from the rural sections of this county, lined Main and Sixth streets.

Industries Shows
The industrial section of the parade saw most of the industries of the county represented with novel exhibits that covered the field of manufacture. All the latest makes of autos were exhibited, including a Ford, that emitted its first put-put back in 1909.

There were plenty of horses also, ranging from high-spirited, blooded creatures to patient cow ponies of the ranges.

The OCC participated in the march, with units of healthy, husky looking youths who carried axes and other tools of their work in the forests.

County Agent Robert G. Fowler was chairman of the parade, and he started it off, practically on time. He was aided by the cooperation of the Granges of the county.

The Roseburg high school band, accompanied by a Douglas county caravan of 80 autos, arrived at 9:45 and entered the procession immediately. The Weed, Calif. high school band, was also late. Both these organizations by appearance and playing made a fine impression.
