"Tarzan" Thrilling Craterian Reads

Who wouldn't be a Tarzan, lord of the jungle, friend of the great ape, ruler of a herd of ponderous pachyderms with a word of command, swinging from tree to tree on airy flights with his mate? Or who, ineligible to be a Tarzan, wouldn't be, in fancy at least, his comely mate, free of all the annoyances of civilization and secure in the strength and prowess of her protector?

"Tarzan and His Mate" in the persons of Johnny Weissmuller and Maureen O'Sullivan, are providing thrills at the Craterian theater, and Medfordites, young and old, will play the game with them. It may be a childish game, but it is exhilarating, and decidedly a change of cinematic diet.

Excitement is the keynote. It starts early and continues throughout with only occasional interludes to establish the contrasting mood of idyllic beauty.

"Tarzan, The Ape Man," to which the new film is a sequel, ended with Jane Porter's decision to remain in the jungle with Tarzan while her white friends departed. A year has passed with surprising little change in the situation. Tarzan has learned a few words of English, and Jane has learned to echo his call and adapt herself to his arboreal mode of life. The peace of their carefree existence is disturbed only by the necessity for Tarzan to rescue his mate occasionally from the jaws of a hungry bear.

Meanwhile in a "White Cargo" setting of a jungle settlement, trouble is brewing. In the elephants' graveyard in Tarzan's country a fortune in ivory is waiting, and two sets of adventurers start after it. The tale and the excitement start here.

Every kind of adventure that could be crowded into an hour and a half of film happens.

Will Rogers Film Runs Extra Day

Will Rogers' hit, "David Harum," is making such a big success at the Rialto theatre that the management has decided to hold it over for an extra day, until tomorrow night.

"David Harum" shows Rogers in a tailor-made role, that of a small town banker whose flair for horse trading brings forth laugh after laugh with the "deacon" as his nemesis. Harum contains essays to the best of the bargain. After taking in a blind horse on one trade he succeeds in "rooking" the deacon with a balky mare, and finds extreme delight in the situation when—on a particularly stormy night, the deacon finds himself in front of Harum's residence unable to get the mare to move.

After acting as Cupid for the romance between Evelyn Venable and Kent Taylor, Harum finds the necessity for winning a trotting race of much more than mere personal glory, and with the stands joining him in the chorus of "Ta-Ra-Ra-Ra-Boom-De-Ay," the horse comes home a winner.

JEALOUSY CAUSE OF MASS SLAYING, SHERIFF'S THEORY

from home at the time, was informed by neighbors that they heard screams coming from the Fazio residence shortly before 9 p. m.

Miss Fazio and a neighbor, Mrs. Amstani, jumped into an automobile and drove to the Fazio home.

Sheriff Leavitt said he believed they encountered the killer as he emerged from the house.

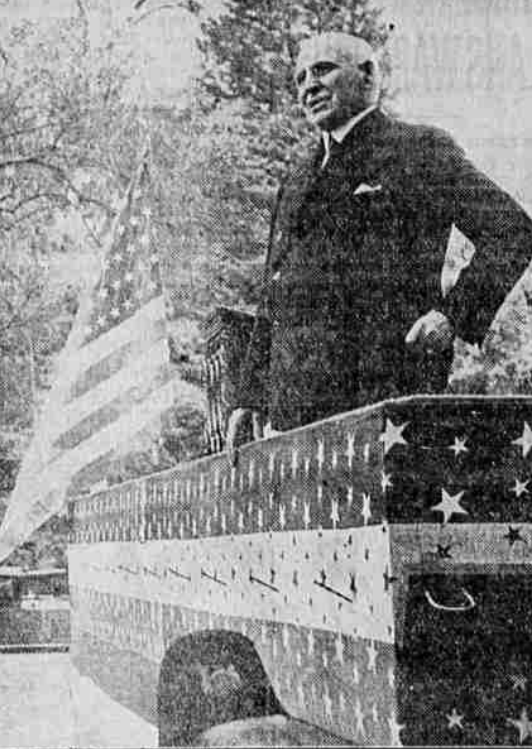

The killer apparently jumped onto the running board of the automobile and slashed Mrs. Amstani to death. Miss Fazio leaped from the machine and attempted to escape. The killer pursued her and stabbed her repeatedly. Then the maddened man fled from the scene.

Suspect Found Hiding
Sheriff Leavitt said Dalosi was found about an hour later, hiding in a lumber pile. He was taken immediately to jail and District Attorney Grover C. Julian began to question him. Julian said the man denied he knew anything about the quintuple killings.

The district attorney and Sheriff Leavitt advanced the theory that the killer and the younger Fazio had been keeping company with the same young woman and that jealousy might have prompted the slayings.

Officers found the knife used in the killings near one of the badly slashed bodies. The weapon had been fashioned from the blade of a plane.

was "a combination badger game and pickpocket racket."

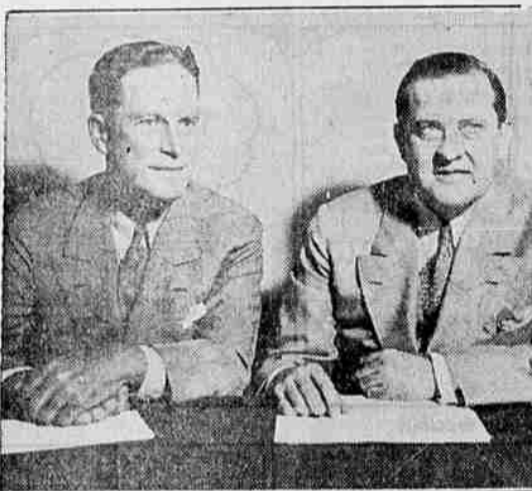

According to the story told the authorities, Johnston was a visitor to the resort, and in strolling around outside the crowded interior came upon a woman who staggered slightly as she walked, and was a friendly sort. She invited Johnston to have a drink which he accepted. They went to a less public place, and the lady produced a bottle and embraced the victim. While he was imbibing, it is alleged Johnston's pocketbook was removed, and passed to the woman's sides waiting in the brush, who scampered away. When Johnston returned to the public festivities he discovered his loss and forthwith told the state police.

According to the authorities, the trio have been under suspicion, and two similar complaints have been lodged against them the past week. They operated among the Jubilee visitors and around beer resorts, the police say.

It is also charged the three operated in Grants Pass and Eugene, before coming here.

ROOSEVELT AIMS IN AAA DEFENDED BY BRAIN TRUSTER

Tugwell, a member of the original Roosevelt "brain trust" and a former Columbia University professor, affirmed his belief in the constitution.

He added a conviction that it is "flexible enough to do what we believe necessary to meet exigencies of the past few years." His reply was "no" when asked whether he believed in "national planning."

Roosevelt acts and policies, he said, have eliminated any danger of a revolutionary movement. He favored the sort of "economic planning" the president has spoken about, he said, but not the kind he mentioned in a 1931 speech by him that dealt with soviet Russia.

"He's a conservative," remarked Senator Murphy (D. Iowa), to a colleague at that point.
