

TOWN REDUCED TO SHAMBLES IN EXPLOSION

A terrific dynamite blast killed at least 150 persons and injured many more at La Libertad, the most important port of San Salvador, in Central America. A fire, caused by the explosion, burned a portion of the town which is a summer resort 30 miles away from the nation's capital. The fatal explosion occurred as the dynamite was being unloaded and it was believed that not one man handling the explosives survived. High government officials rushed to the scene to aid in rescue work. Upper: a picture of the dock where the explosion occurred and (left) a street scene. (Associated Press Photo)

BLAZING CARGO QUENCHED ABOARD DOLLAR LINER

Firemen and longshoremen at Honolulu are shown putting out a fire in the hold of the S.S. President Lincoln. The cotton cargo of the vessel was discovered afire about 150 miles from the Hawaiian port and live steam shot into the hold kept the blaze under control until the liner docked and firemen responded to the call of alarm.
