"Glamour" at the Rialto Tomorrow. One little known theory as to the best means by which a woman may acquire a glamorous personality is expounded in "Glamour," a drama based on "the eternal triangle" which opens an engagement of three days at the Rialto theatre tomorrow.

Constance Cummings and Paul Lukas play featured roles in this absorbing screenplay, while Phillip Reed is seen at the other point of the love triangle.

As the story opens Miss Cummings, a chorus girl, worms herself into the affections of Lukas, composer of uniformly successful musical plays, and he eventually devotes all his talents to the advancement of the girl, bringing about her elevation to stardom. They are married, and the young wife becomes the reigning success of the New York stage, happily wed. At length, however, Reed is engaged as her leading man, and soon afterward the two fall in love with each other with the broken hearted husband pretending indifference.

The final sequences of the picture bring about a series of dramatic events which shed new light on this age-old situation. The screen play is based on one of the most popular stories of Edna Ferber.

Fan Dancer On Craterian Stage

The Fan Dance, made famous throughout the nation by means of newspaper publicity from the Century of Progress, was brought to Medford yesterday to the stage of the Craterian theatre, where Fay Baker, dancer from the Streets of Paris at the World's Fair, opened a three day engagement.

Miss Baker's dance, a graceful and artistically beautiful routine in which the fans are her only costume, marked the climax of a quarter hour stage appearance, in which tap and ballet routines were also offered.

However, the fan dance, performed in the light of a bluish spotlight, was the outstanding attraction. With her colored plumes waving and undulating, strategically unrevealing, Miss Baker glides through the dance with a willowy grace that brought her a storm of applause.

How she wins her point, together with the smart musical theme, makes the film amusing and tuncful entertainment.

On the screen, Constance Bennett is shown as star of "Moulin Rouge," the story of an ambitious young wife.
