Comparing the Cup Seekers

Here's The Who, What And How-Big Of Yachts In Big International Test

By TOM HORGAN Associated Press Sports Writer NEWPORT, R. I.—(AP)—It is possible, though not at all probable, that a comparison of the salient dimensions may reveal in advance to some extent of naval construction which of three American aspirants for the defense of the American cup will win the nomination for that responsibility.

By the same token, it might be just as possible to ascertain whether victory or defeat is in store for the British challenger, Tom Sopwith's Endeavour.

Here are the most apparent dimensions of the challenger and the three "Y" class sloops that are striving for selection as her opponent:

Overall Water-line Beam Draft Endeavour — 130 ft. 83-6 22 ft. 15 ft. Yankee — 120 83-0 22-6 15 ft. Rainbow — 125-7 82 ft. 20-11 14-11 Westamoc — 125-9 85 ft. 20-3 15-4

There is some flexibility as to the waterline length and draft, due to the manner in which the yachts may be ballasted.

Theoretically they're "All Even" All four contenders are built to "Y" class specifications, so there is no room for great differences. If an advantage was taken by a designer in one direction, he was compelled to concede something in another, so, theoretically, one boat should be just about as fast as another. Their sail areas differ little. Rainbow wears 7,372 square feet, Yankee 7,533 and Westamoc 7,550, according to latest figures.

But there are far more subtle differences than the above — delicate curves in the four sleek hulls that would show only in the complex plans of their designers.

Since not even Lloyd's Register has ever succeeded in measuring the genius and mental capacity of the men who design, build and sail racing yachts, there remains a vast unknown quotient facing anyone who would pick the victor before the last race is sailed.

Aerodynamics in Endeavour Here are some elements that defy tape measure and slide rule: Endeavour was designed by Charles Nicholson and built this spring by the firm of Camper & Nicholson at Gosport, England. She is skippered by her owner, T. O. M. Sopwith, noted airplane designer and builder, who applied many principles of aerodynamics to her construction. He is said to have carried stream-lining farther than ever before in a sailing yacht. Her sails are by the old firm of Hank & Liphorn of Gosport.

Yankee was designed by Frank C. Francis Adams, former secretary of ago by the Lawley corporation at Boston. She was one of the three unsuccessful candidates in 1930.

Yankee is skippered by Charles Francis Adams, former secretary of the navy, who held the wheel of "Recon" in 1920 to turn back the late Sir Thomas Lipton's Shamrock IV. Her sails are by Burrows of New York. Chandler Hovey of Boston is listed as Yankee's managing owner, but several other Bostonians opened their purses to put Yankee back into competition.

Rainbow was designed by W. Starling Burgess and built this spring at the Herreshoff yard in Bristol.

BULL USED FOR PARACHUTE TEST

MONTECELIO, Italy (AP)—Aviators at the airport here, a big experimental field for bombing planes, testing a huge parachute designed to keep planes from crashing, found themselves running out of weights.

Someone thought of Teodoro, a hefty but amiable bull in an adjoining pasture, tied the parachute to him and led him into the fuselage of a huge bomber.

At a height of several thousand feet the pilot pulled a lever which opened a chute and down shot Teodoro. But the parachute held and the old bull waded down as gracefully as a bull may wade, landing on all four feet.

Then he "took off" on his own account and the whole airforce chased him over hill and dale to rescue their parachute. But when they caught up with Teodoro, he had pretty well wrecked the thing.

Teodoro was led back to his pasture, but the aviators say that whenever a plane passes over him now he springs in the opposite direction.

CLERGYMEN BALK AT TAKING OATH FIDELITY TO HITLER

BERLIN, Germany, Aug. 10.—(AP) Many clergymen are rebelling against swearing fealty to Chancellor Hitler, declaring the German ruler seeks to place himself above God and the church.

A law requiring clergymen to take an oath of "fidelity and obedience" to Hitler is one of several enacted yesterday by the national synod. It is part of the Nazi program of a unified Protestant church.

Representatives of the Bavarian, Wuertemberg and Hanover state churches protested passage of the law. Many of them said flatly today they would not take the oath.

Some 800 clergymen already are under suspension for opposition to the chancellor and his church lieutenant, Reichsbishop Ludwig Mueller. Those who refuse to take the oath face the same fate. Mueller has absolute authority over church matters.

The opposition maintains the oath mixes things spiritual and temporal and makes it possible for Mueller to castigate every refusal to obey his orders as disobedience to Germany's dictator, Hitler.

Speakers for this faction of the synod pointed out that in the oath Hitler is mentioned first, then the church order and only at the end the congregation, which, under Lutheran beliefs, should come at the beginning.

The German press was told it must publish no account of the synod's proceedings except what appeared in Mueller's office might put out.
