GOOD PORT HELD KEY TO HANDLING TIMBER RESOURCE

Rep. Lea Urges Army Board To Approve Dredging And Visions Railroad—Senator Steiwer Backs Plan.

By H. C. HUNTER (Associated Press Pacific Northwest Correspondent)

WASHINGTON, Aug. 11.—(AP)—Pointing out that 48,810,000,000 feet of virgin timber is awaiting development in southern Oregon and northern California, Representative Lea, of Santa Rosa, Calif., has pictured to the army board of engineers a bright future for the little town of Crescent City, Calif.

Lea is backing a proposal to dredge the harbor of Crescent City to a depth of 30 feet to permit the docking of ocean-going vessels.

Using figures obtained from the United States forest service the representative said there was a total of 1,668,000,000,000 feet of uncut timber in the United States, of which 1,346,000,000,000 feet was virgin timber. Of the virgin stands remaining in this country, Lea said, 950,000,000,000 feet is in the three Pacific coast states of Washington, Oregon and California. He estimated that 48,810,000,000 feet of this virgin timber was in one California and three Oregon counties which could be tapped by a deep sea harbor at Crescent City.

"We are drawing on our lumber supply about five times as fast as the growth," Lea said. "At present other regions are furnishing most of the timber, but that is only hastening the time when the Pacific coast will be the principal source of supply."

The representative predicted that within a comparatively short time the lumber available from the forests in the mountains back of Crescent City would be needed. When that time comes, he said, a good port will be essential at Crescent City.

Pointing out that the little California city is the "natural outlet for the southern Oregon and northern California timber," Lea said there "is nothing more sensible than constructing a harbor or a road along a natural line of travel."

He envisaged a time when a transcontinental railroad would link Crescent City with the east by way of Klamath Falls, and through Nevada.

"With the completion of the Crescent City harbor," Lea said, "all of the Pacific coast and hinterland between San Francisco and Portland would be developed."

At the present the little California city has no rail outlet, but a line has been proposed from Grants Pass, Ore., through the vast mountain timberlands to that point. Such a railroad would be available for transporting the lumber and logs to tidewater at the California port and would hasten the development of the city, backers of the rail line have said.

Development of Crescent City as a harbor also has the backing of Oregon congressional representatives. Senator Steiwer of Portland, having urged that it be dredged to permit its use by sea-going vessels so that an outlet for southern Oregon products would be available.

The site was inspected recently by members of the army board of engineers while on a tour of the Pacific coast region.

ULRICH REPORTS TRANSIENT LABOR

Lewis Ulrich, manager of the local National Reemployment Service, reported yesterday that although there is a surplus of local labor to handle the fruit harvest, a few orchards and packing establishments have out-of-town workers on their payrolls.

Mr. Ulrich said that at the beginning of the fruit season, all the major orchardists and fruit packers agreed to hire only local help, in cooperation with the reemployment service, through which many of the local needs have been given jobs.
