Mae Clark in Rialto Show

When a roughneck, wisecracking sailor finds himself the center of attraction in a group of debutantes, the fun starts in "Let's Talk It Over," at the Rialto theater for today and Monday. Chester Morris and Mae Clark are the leading players with Andy Devine and Frank Craven also in featured roles. Filled with comedy, high interest and fast action, the film—with its theme of Uncle Sam's navy boys and high-minded society folk—is rich with entertainment. That robust old sea ditty, "Barnacle Bill the Sailor," even comes in for its share of the fun. With an audience of bewildered society people as an audience, Morris, quite properly "billed," sings the song with much gusto intermingled with loud hicups. But the navy, having landed, takes the situation well in hand.

Brickell, educational adviser at Camp McKinley, CCC, visited at the Medford district headquarters Saturday on his return from a leave of absence during which he visited his family in Sacramento.

David Harum

Popular demand brings Will Rogers to the Rialto theater today and Monday in "David Harum." The film portrays the life of a shrewd and sturdy horse dealer whose cold bartering and unethical methods of doing business are the gospel of the small town in which he lives.

On Brief Vacation—Mr. and Mrs. Herb Gray, their son Herb Jr., and E. C. Ferguson left yesterday for Crescent City, Eureka, Redding and other California points on a three-day vacation trip.

All kinds of legal blanks for sale for rent, no hunting, no trespassing and other cards for sale at Commercial Printing Dept. of Mail Tribune.
