CANNED TOMATO

RICH SOURCE OF

NEEDED VITAMIN

Most Foods Lose Important Element in Cooking, But Tomato Different—Canning Methods Are Given

By Bureau of Home Economics, U. S. Department of Agriculture.

Have you lately, in the course of much conversation about vitamins, heard some discouraging words about your home-canned tomatoes or tomato juice? If so, don't let it worry you, and don't let it keep you from putting up all the tomatoes or tomato juice you can use, says the Bureau of Home Economics of the U. S. Department of Agriculture. You may prefer to can the tomatoes and "make" the juice when you open the can, by straining out the seed; or you may like to can the juice in the first place. You get a good product either way, and tomatoes and tomato juice, home-canned or factory-canned, are among the most economical foods you can put on your pantry shelves, especially valuable in winter.

More Reasons Than One

Tomatoes are valuable for many reasons, but the reason with which we are concerned at the moment is vitamin C. This vitamin, which is one of the necessities of life and good health, is not hard to obtain if you have plenty of fresh fruits and vegetables in oranges, grapefruit, lemons, citrus fruits, grapefruit, lemons, cantaloupes, watermelons, raw cabbage, and greens of different kinds, as well as tomatoes. But it does not stay with you as other vitamins do. Relatively little is stored up in the body to be used as needed. Therefore you must have a continuous supply, and this becomes more difficult when fresh fruits and vegetables are out of season.

That is where tomatoes come in so nicely. Most foods lose more or less of their vitamin C when they are cooked or canned, for this vitamin is usually destroyed by heat, especially in the presence of air. Not so to tomatoes, however—rather, not so much so. The acidity of the tomato prevents for the most part the loss of vitamin C which occurs in the non-acid foods when cooked. And tomatoes, either as tomatoes or juice, are a cheap enough food to be relied on as a regular part of the diet all the year.

Short Cooking Best

It is true, however, that the method of cooking has something to do with the vitamin values you get from tomatoes or any other food. According to the Bureau of Home Economics, short cooking keeps the loss.

In canning the same is true. So when you are putting up tomatoes or tomato juice, if you would preserve the maximum vitamin values, use the hot-pack method, but do it in a way to reduce the processing time as much as possible. Of course, if you want the tomatoes to be whole in the cans, you will have to use the cold-pack, with much longer processing time. But there are few occasions when whole-canned tomatoes would serve any purpose not served by the ordinary canned tomatoes.

'KINGFISH' MARRIES A FAN DANCER

There was much ado along Chicago's Maxwell street when it was learned that Kingfish Levinsky, the ex-fish peddler turned boxfighter, had married Rosie Glickman, a fan dancer. Here's Levinsky with his bride "inside the ropes." A few hours before the wedding at Crown for the of "Kingfish." (Associated Press Photo)

Directions for canning tomatoes and tomato juice, according to the Bureau of Home Economics recommendations, follow:

Select firm, ripe tomatoes, free from spots and decay. Put into trays or shallow layers in wire baskets and dip in boiling water for about a minute, according to ripeness. Remove and plunge quickly into cold water for an instant. Drain and core and peel promptly.

For Hot-Pack

For a hot-pack, cut the tomatoes in quarters, heat just to boiling, and pack hot. Process 5 minutes in boiling water.

For a cold-pack, after draining, coring and peeling, as above, pack the whole tomatoes into jars or cans as closely as possible. Fill the can with thick tomato sauce or with the juice of other tomatoes, season with 1 teaspoon of salt per quart. Process quart and pint jars for 45 minutes in boiling water. Process No. 2 and No. 3 plain tin or sanitary or E enamelled cans for 35 minutes.

Select firm, ripe tomatoes, deep red if you can get them, and fresh from the vine. Wash them well and cut them into pieces. Leave the skins on, but cut out the cores and all green, or moldy, or decayed parts. The green parts make the juice bitter, and even a few bad spots may injure the flavor of the whole batch of juice or may cause it to spoil.

Handle the tomatoes in small lots and work fast. Don't try to make more than one or two gallons of juice at a time. If it has to stand, it loses flavor and vitamin value. After the tomatoes are cut up, immerse them just enough to soften them. Don't let them boil. Then immediately press the hot tomatoes through a fine sieve, to take out the seeds and skins. Measure the juice, and for each quart add 1/2 to 1 teaspoon of salt. (Or leave the salt out, if the juice is for a baby or an invalid on a salt-free diet.)

For Glass Jars

To pack in glass jars, heat the juice quickly just to boiling—190 degrees Fahrenheit, if you use a thermometer. Don't let it cook for an instant longer than you can help. Then pour the hot juice into the hot sterilized jars, fill them up right to the top, and seal at once. No processing is necessary for tomato juice in glass jars. Set the hot jars aside to cool, out of drafts.

If you are using tin cans, the method is a little different. Heat the tomato juice just to the simmering point. Stop it before it comes to the boil. Pour the hot juice into the tin cans until they are full, seal them, and immediately process for 5 minutes in a boiling water bath, counting time when the water actually boils, not before. After processing, cool the tin cans of juice at once in running water.

Store tomato juice in a cool place, and if it is in glass jars, put these in a dark cool place, for light has a bad effect on color and flavor of tomato juice.

GERMAN BOYCOTT

WILL GO ON SAYS

LEADER OF JEWS

Rabbi Wise in Militant Talk Warns Hitler Must Erase All Violations of Human Freedom and Equality

By Joseph E. Sharkey. (Associated Press Foreign Staff.)

GENEVA, Aug. 22.—(AP)—Rabbi Stephen S. Wise of New York in a militant speech Tuesday declared before the third world Jewish conference that the boycott against Germany by Jews will not be abandoned until Adolf Hitler's regime cancels every law or practice "violating human freedom, political equality, and the ideals of civilization."

"Hitler Jews chided.

Rabbi Wise attacked the timidity of Jews who failed to approve the boycott and threw down the gauntlet to Jews who have issued the warning that the Jews of Palestine will not support the projected world Jewish conference if the present Geneva conference acts adversely against their negotiations with the Nazi government.

"For my part," declared Wise, "I cannot believe in the seriousness of such warning or threat."

In impassioned tones, the New York rabbi urged German Jews to spurn any compromise "terms of peace" Nazi Germany may offer. He said he anticipated and feared an offer which would prove a palliative treatment with the object of disarming Jewish protests.

Trunking denounced.

"To die at the hands of Nazi-ism is cruel," Rabbi Wise declared. "To survive by the grace would be ten thousand times worse."

"We will survive Nazi-ism unless we commit the inexplicable sin of bartering with the Nazis to save some Jewish victims."

Turning to the question of Palestine, Wise registered "a solemn protest" against the breach of the boycott practiced by Palestine. "A breach which continues to be ever widened."

"This trafficking of Jewish Palestine with Nazi Germany must cease at once," said Wise. "There is something worse than entering Zion with bowed heads and that is with unclean hands."
