CINEMA 'STILLS' ALSO SUBJECTED TO CENSOR RULE

By Leicester Wagener
United Press Staff Correspondent
HOLLYWOOD—(UP)—Censorship of motion pictures at the source of supply doesn't stop at the films themselves—still photographs for lobby display and for newspaper consumption also come under official scrutiny of the Hill Hays office.

It isn't a new move. For more than a year, in fact, studios have submitted prints of every production "still" taken by their respective assistants for perusal by John Lewis, chief censor, and Joseph I. Breen, the films official censor.

With this revolutionary step, modestly entered the movies, "Leg" art of scantily-clad beauties was not permitted to leave the studios. Pictures of Clark Gable and Joan Crawford in a "horizontal" clinch were turned down. Everything became "pollyannish," if you get what I mean.

It wasn't long before the studios decided to save the negative and submit only pictures which would receive the Hays office stamp of approval.

As a result, the 3000 to 4000 still photographs which pass under the censoring eyes of Lewis each week, less than one per cent are rejected. Last week only seven prints got thumbs down—and two of them were deliberately posed in an effort to get Lewis' goat.

But there is no dearth of undraped art to grace the rotogravure sections of the Sunday papers. Newspapers have huge "morgues" where pictures of every kind are stored. It is no problem at all to go back through the files and dig up "hot" art to spread through the paper. One enterprising syndicate is now releasing old-time photographs throughout the country in an effort to fill the "crying" need of the picture editors for something sensational.

The newspapers, however, are overlooking a bet. News photographers are welcome on every lot in Hollywood. If they saw the light, they could pose and take any pictures their little heart desired, and the Hays office could not say them nay.

Richard Dix at Rialto Today

"Your father," Richard Dix tells Dorothy Wilson in "His Greatest Gamble" at the Rialto theater today and Thursday, "was a half-mad cavalier who lights his cigarettes on the stars and throws his cigarette away."

Dix is really employing this whimsey to describe himself—the girl's father—without his daughter knowing the relation. He is the gaily poetic ad-
